KIRKMAHOE is a parish in the district of Nithsdale, bounded by Kirkcudbright, Kirkcudbrightshire, Dumfries, and Dunscore, and Keir; it is situated about 4 miles S. from Dumfries, which is the nearest railway station. From some of the summits of its uplands a beautiful view is obtained of the pretty valley of the Nith, fringed in the distance by the Solway tide, and in the far background by Criffel and the Cumberland mountains. The Established church is a handsome Gothic edifice; there is also a Free Church. The lands of this parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations. In this parish are the hamlets of KIRKTON, DUNCOW, and DALSWINTON. Acreage about 12,553. Population in 1881, 1,250, and in 1891, 1,160.

ECCLEFECHAN,

WITH THE PARISH OF HODDAM, AND THE VILLAGES OF EAGLESFIELD, KIRTLEBRIDGE, AND WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village in the parish of Hoddam, 71 miles S. of Edinburgh, 75 S.E. of Glasgow, 20 N.W. by rail from Carlisle, 12 E. of Dumfries, 6 N. of Annan, and 14 W.S.W. from Langholm, lying in a fine situation near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, within a mile of a station on the Caledonian railway. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. A few of the inhabitants find employment in weaving cotton goods for the Glasgow manufacturers, who have constantly a demand for the labours of the loom. Ecclefechan contains some respectable shops, in which a variety of trades is carried on. Fairs are held for cattle, &c. on the Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the Tuesday after the 20th of October; Edward Brook, Esq., of Hoddam, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings and for all cattle exposed for sale. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established in the town. There is a Board school here, and the places of worship are the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches. Ecclefechan can boast of being the birthplace of Thomas Carlyle, renowned for his quaint but powerful writings. The remains of the great philosopher were brought from London (where he died in the early part of 1881, and interred in the parish churchyard here. Within a short distance of the village are the remains of a Roman camp, said to be one of the most complete in Scotland. Hoddam Castle, the seat of Edward Brook, Esq., is finely situated on the river Annan, about 2½ miles w. from Ecclefechan. About 2½ miles e. from Ecclefechan is the estate of Springkell, the property of Sir John Maxwell. The parish of Hoddam contains about 7,514 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,548 inhabitants, and Ecclefechan 768; in 1891 the parish contained 1,593, and Ecclefechan 780.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish lying on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan; it is about 7 miles in length by 4 in breadth; acreage about 17,545. It abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its lime quarries, but much of the land is of rather poor quality. The village, a small one, is about 2 miles e. from Ecclefechan and about 12 s.w. from Langholm. There is an Established church and a board school. Kirtlebridge is the nearest railway station, 2 miles d. stant.

KIRTLEBRIDGE and EAGLESFIELD are small villages in the above parish, the former 8 miles s.e. and the latter 2½ s. from Ecclefechan. At the latter place is a Board school. In the immediate vicinity are the famous salmon and trout fishings of the Annan, the Esk, and the Kirtle. Kirtlebridge is a station on the Caledonian Railway.

WATERBECK is a village also in the parish of Middlebie, about 4 miles n.e. from Ecclefechan on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been much improved by the late Mr. Robert Carlyle and his sons. It is notable for the large supply of wool, cured bacon, and cheese which it sends annually to the different markets. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship, and there is a Board school in the village. Kirtlebridge is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant. The population of Middlebie parish in 1881 was 1,927.

GRAITNEY (OR GREтна),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GRAITNEY (more popularly called Gretna), is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish, the acreage of which is about 7,863, comprehends the old parishes of Gretna and Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Gretna, or Gretna Green, is situated on the road from Annan to Carlisle, by Longton, 8½ m. from the former, and 9½ w. from the latter town, and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. The Glasgow and South-Western and Caledonian Railways pass through the parish, and there is a station contiguous to the village. This place was long noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages. Any person could perform the ceremony, which merely amounted to a declaration, before witnesses, that the parties were man and wife, such an acknowledgement being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland. By a certificate being subscribed by the officiating priest and witnesses the union became quite indissoluble. The fee charged varied according to circumstances and the position of the party—from half a guinea to £40, and even £50 has been paid. Bills were brought into the House of Lords to alter the law of Scottish marriages, and more especially the Gretna Green contracts, but they were not carried further than to require that if the parties belong to any other country, one of them must have resided seven days in the kingdom of Scotland before they can be so joined together. The first of these convenient priests was a fisherman named Coulthard. He kept a ferry boat, before any high roads were made through the country. The following was the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, was furnished:—

“KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, COUNTY OF DUMFRIES, PARISH OF GREтна.”

“These are to certify to all whom these presents may come, that A.B., from the parish of —, in the county of —, and C.D., from the parish of —, in the county of —, being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were this day married after the manner of the laws of the Church of England, and agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

“As witness our hands at Gretna Hall, &c., &c.”

About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participated in this matrimonial trade. This village, as also that of Gretna, belongs to the Maxwell family. At SARKEFOOT about a mile from the latter village, is good bathing ground. About 2 miles west from Gretna is the small village of Rigg, where there is a United Presbyterian chapel. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,212, and in 1891, 1,141.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Graitney. The kirk and parochial school, which stand at the southern end of the parish, are about 3 miles N.W. from Gretna. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones, amongst others a sarcophagus, bearing a Latin inscription and eight shields of arms, to the memory of William Coulthard, chief of his name, who was resident in the parish till near the end of last century. About a mile from the village is Moss Knowle, the residence of William Graham, Esq., a very fine and stately mansion. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat. The Caledonian Railway, which runs through the village, has a station here. Population in 1881, 1,461, and in 1891, 1,289; acreage, 11,529.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, HALF-MORTON, WESTERKIRK, AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

LANGHOLM is a thriving manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 73 miles from Edinburgh, 80 s.w. from Glasgow, 80 E. by N. from Dumfries, the like distance s.e. from Moffat, 21 N. from Carlisle, 18 N.E. from Annan, and 12 N. from Longtown, Cumberland, delightfully situated on both sides of the Esk, over which there is a suspension bridge, and also a stone bridge of three arches, from which may be seen the confluence of the Ewes and the Wauchope with the Esk. This parish and the adjoining ones of Canonbie, Ewes, Westerkirk, and Eskdalemuir are known as the "five kirks of Eskdale." The town of Langholm owes its origin to the border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all-powerful Armstrongs, but is now in a state of ruin. At one time no fewer than twelve such towers existed, and among them Wauchope Castle, the earliest seat of the Lindsay family, was in the immediate neighbourhood. The tower of Gilnockie still stands about four miles below Langholm, on the right bank of the Esk. It was some little time ago renovated by the late Duke of Buccleuch, and is now open for the inspection of visitors. The author of the "Picture of Scotland" says:—"Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name was associated with many of its localities." It was on the Brankholm Holm that, when going to meet King James V., he and his "gallant company" of thirty-six men ran their horses and "brak their spears." Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick; the story of the judicial execution of this border chief and his companions, by James V., is well known. The graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted churchyard at Carlenrig. This district is also associated with the Covenanters, especially with the memory of Alexander Peden, one of the most famous of the Scottish worthies; a "knowe," or small hill, commanding a delightful view of the valley, is still named "Peden's View," and at its foot rises "Peden's Well," where, in answer to his prayer, a mist is said to have shrouded him from the dragoons who were seeking his life." Langholm is the birthplace of Julius Meikle, translator of "Camoe Lucied," and author of the song "There's nae luck about the house." Burnfoot, the residence of W. E. Malcolm, Esq. J.P. is situated on the banks of the Esk, three miles from Langholm, and was the birthplace of the "four knights of Eskdale," Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm, General Sir John Malcolm, Sir James Malcolm, and Sir Charles Malcolm, who in various ways distinguished themselves in different parts of the world. In the neighbourhood of Langholm is a copious mineral well, called Bloch Well, which is efficacious in the cure of cutaneous diseases. It is less known than it should be, owing to the limited accommodation which exists in its immediate neighbourhood. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the "riding times," or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. The making of plaids and blankets for the neighbouring shepherds has developed into the manufacture of tweeds and other fabrics, which find their way into all parts of the kingdom, and large quantities are exported; they bear a character second to none in the woollen market. Instead of the one small mill which employed a few hands, not less than six factories now give employment to the inhabitants. Now that there is railway communication, supplied by the North British Railway Company, affording an outlet to all parts of the country, there is little doubt that Langholm, with its inexhaustible water power, will become one of the most important manufacturing towns in the south of Scotland. Ruskin, in his book on modern painters, remarks, "There are perhaps no scenes in our own island more interesting than the wooded dingles which traverse them, the red rocks glowing out on either side and shelving down into the pools of their deep brown rivers, as at Langholm and Jedburgh; the steep oak copses climbing the banks, the paler plumes of birch shaking themselves free into the light of the sky above, and the fen arches of the monastery, where the fields in the glen are the greenest, or the stones of the border tower where its cliffs are steepest, rendering both field and cliff a thousand fold more dear to the heart and sight." In the market place stands the Town Hall, ornamented with a neat spire. Besides the woollen mills already alluded to, the town contains a number of respectable shops, a branch each of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company, two distilleries, a brewery, two dyehouses, a tannery, and some excellent hotels. There is likewise an elegant and commodious temperance hotel, in which is included the drill room of H. Company, 3rd Vol. Batt. K.O.S.B. A newspaper is published in the town—the Eskdale and Liddesdale Advertiser. The government of the town is vested in a baron baillie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is superior, and a board of Commissioners, elected by the inhabitants. Sheriff small debt courts and justice of peace courts are held at stated periods.

The parish church, a modern structure, is allowed to be one of the most elegant and substantial in the south of Scotland; the other places of worship are a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and one for the Evangelical Union body, and a very handsome Mission Hall, erected a few years ago, which is one of the finest of its kind in Scotland. There are also commodious Board schools. There is a very extensive and richly endowed library, which derives considerable advantage from a magnificent bequest of the late Thomas Telford, Esq. the celebrated engineer, who was a native of the district. A very neat and substantial stone building has been erected for the use of the library, at a cost of about £2,600; £1,000 of this sum being a bequest of the late Alexander Reid, Esq. the remainder having been raised by subscription. The inhabitants have brought into the town at a considerable expense the copious spring known as "White Well," whereby every family in the place is amply supplied with the purest water. A monument to Sir John Malcolm stands on the hill behind the town, erected at a cost of £1,300, and there is another near the Post Office in memory of his brother, Sir Pulteney Malcolm. The market day is Wednesday; fairs are held on the 1st Wednesday in March (for the lambing season), 16th April (for seeds), the last Tuesday in May (old style), 26th July (for lambs and wool), 18th September (for sheep), and 5th November (for cattle); there are also two hiring days—one in May and the other in November. There has been established a fortnightly sale of cattle, sheep, &c., and the Eskdale and Liddesdale Agricultural Society hold their show of stock generally in October, at which premiums are awarded. The parish of Langholm embraces an area of 16,971 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 4,612; of this number the town had 4,280. In 1891 the population of the parish was 3,970; of the town 3,643.

CANONBIE (or Canonby), a parish half way between Longtown and Langholm, six miles from either town and on the southern border of the county, is separated on the south-east from England by the river Liddel, whose romantic banks present some pleasing scenery, and on the south-west by the "Scotch Dyke." The river Esk intersects the parish dividing it into two equal parts. The parish, in which are mines of coal and quarries of lime of excellent quality, and through which runs the high road from Edinburgh to London, is about 9 miles long and 6 broad. The kirk is a very large stone building, and will accommodate 1,400 persons. There is also a handsome Free church, and Board schools. The scenery along the Esk is considered to be the finest in the south of Scotland. The Duke of Buccleuch is sole proprietor of the parish. There are two stations—Canonbie and Gilnockie—on the Langholm branch of the North British Railway. The hamlets of Hollows, Bowholm, Claygate, Glenzier, Forgebraehead, Everton, Rowanburn and Woodhouse, are in this parish, which embraces an area of 24,142 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,723; in 1891 the number was 2,476.

ESKDALEMUIR is a large and mountainous pastoral parish of 43,282 acres, on the north-eastern border of the county, and in the district of Eskdale. The manse, which is about the centre of the parish, is 14 miles N.N.W. from Langholm, its post town and nearest railway station. Besides the parish church, there is a Free church, and also Board schools. The river Esk has its rise in this parish. A very small portion of Eskdalemuir is under cultivation; the principal land proprietor is the Duke of Buccleuch. Population in 1881, 543, and in 1891, 488.

WESTERKIRK parish, containing about 36,992 acres, is also situated near the north-eastern boundary of the county, about six miles N.W. from Langholm, its post town and nearest railway station. Nearly the whole of this portion of the district is devoted to pasturage for sheep and cattle. The church stands on the left bank of the river Esk, and there are Board schools in the parish. The Duke of Buccleuch, Sir Frederick J. W. Johnstone, and Colonel Malcolme are the principal landowners. Population in 1881, 478, and in 1891, 454.

The parish of EWES is situated at the eastern extremity of the county, about 4 miles N. from Langholm, its post town and nearest railway station. It is remarkable for its beautiful ranges of green hills, covered with verdure to their summits, and the clearness of the river, which affords excellent troutling. Numerous plantations on the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch add additional beauty to the appearance of the sweet dale of Ewes. Arkleton, the property of William Scott Elliot, Esq., is one of the finest residences in the south of Scotland. The parish church is the only place of worship, and there is a Board school. The acreage of the parish is 24,911, and in 1881 it had a population of 337, and in 1891, 299.

HALF-MORTON is a parish in the district of Eskdale, lying between Canonbie (its post town) and Kirkpatrick-Fleming. The places of worship are Established and Free churches and an United Presbyterian church; there is also a Board school. The parish, which has an area of 6,084 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 497, and in 1891, 484. The village of CHAPEL KNOWE is about 10 miles S.W. of Langholm. Kirkpatrick is the nearest railway station, 8 miles distant

LOCHMABEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KIRKMICHAEL, TINWALD AND TORTHORWALD, AND THE VILLAGES OF AMISFIELD, COLLIN, ROUCAN, SMALLHOLM, GREENHILL, HECK, HIGHTAE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the parish of the name 65 miles s. from Edinburgh, 70 s.e. from Glasgow, 33 s.e. from Sanquhar, 30 n.w. from Carlisle, 31 s.e. from Thornhill, the same distance w. from Langholm, 15 s. from Moffat, 13 n.w. from Annan, 10 n.w. from Ecclefechan, 8½ n. by e. from Dumfries, and 4 w. from Lockerbie. It is situated in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. Few towns are situated in a district of so rich and varied beauty, and few are associated with so many historical events. It traces its origin from a very early period, and derives its name from its situation being among a number of beautiful lakes, or lochs; the loch on which it is so delightfully placed (Lochmaben) signifying in Scotch-Irish "the lake on the white plain." The Castle Loch, which flows very near the south side of the town, is about three miles in circumference; the Mill Loch is somewhat of less dimensions, and lies on the north side of the town; this loch flows at times even up to the doors of the houses. In these two lochs there is a fish called the vendace, or vendise, which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with anywhere else in Britain. It is delicately formed, about six inches long, and resembles a young herring. How it came here is not exactly known; some suppose it to have been brought from La Vendee, in France, when Bruce's castle was a royal residence, and hence the name vendace. There is annual vendace club, composed of gentlemen of the county, who meet once a year, about the end of July, to have a day's fishing and recreation on the Castle Loch. There is also another vendace club, who fish in the Mill Loch. These two Lochs, as well as four others of considerable extent, are much resorted to by boating and fishing parties, and form a very agreeable recreation both to the inhabitants and also to tourists and visitors. The Dumfries, Lochmaben and Lockerbie branch of the Caledonian line has a station here, and also others at AMISFIELD and SHIELDHILL.

The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength, which was built by Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Braces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake which is called Castle Loch, and was surrounded by a deep moat, the outline of which is still to be seen. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the same loch; this edifice, with its outworks, covered about 16 acres. After different grants to various relations of the Braces, it was annexed by Parliament, in 1487, to the Crown, and is now the property or in the keeping of Captain Hope Johnstone, of Raehills. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted by James VI., and states that it is a renewal of charters granted by his illustrious predecessors; its date is 16th of July, 1612.

From this charter it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c., totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequence. The municipal government is vested in a provost, one bailie, a dean of guild, a treasurer and five councillors. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Kirkcubright, Annan and Sanquhar in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being R. T. Reid, Esq. q.c. The Town Hall, with its tower and clock, stands in the middle of the principal street, opposite to which there is a very handsome statue of Robert Bruce. A subscription library affords information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported. There are a Freemasons' lodge, two curling clubs, bowling green, and other associations. There is a branch establishment here of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a Savings Bank for the town and neighbourhood. Lochmaben is not a place of much trade, there being no manufactories here. It is a rural town, and a place of resort for tourists and strangers, who in the summer months visit it as a place of retirement and recreation.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells. The foundation stone was laid April 10th, 1818, and was opened for divine worship in July, 1820. The edifice, which cost about £3,000, is capable of accommodating about 1,400 persons. The Free church, built in 1844, is a plain and neat structure, capable of accommodating 700 persons; the cost of its erection was about £300. There is a chapel for the United Presbyterians and a Free church at HIGHTAE, about three miles from Lochmaben. Fairs for the sale of pork are held on the second and fourth Mondays in January, on the first and third Mondays in February and March, on the last Monday in November, and on the second and last Mondays in December; and for seeds on the third Monday in March.

Within the parish of Lochmaben there are also four villages known as the "Four towns," viz.: SMALLHOLM, GREENHILL, HECK, and HIGHTAE. They are remarkable in Scotland as holding their lands by a peculiar tenure. The proprietors of lands in these baronies are called kingly tenants, and by successive warrants and protections of the King in 1592, 1602, and 1664, declared to have right to continue their possessions undisturbed and at the old rent, so long as they shall continue to pay the same. These baronies are said to have been conferred on the retainers of the Bruce, and many of the present holders can trace their ancestry for hundreds of years back. Son succeeds father, and the title is completed by the entry of the name in Lord Mansfield's rental book, and the usual solemnities of service and infesment, otherwise common to the law of Scotland, are here unknown. The parish comprises 10,813 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 2,316, and in 1891, 2,521.

KIRKMICHAEL, united with Garren, in the district of Nithsdale, is about ten miles long and four broad, and contains about 16,983 acres. The parish of Kirkpatrick-juxta bounds it on the north-west, Johnstone on the north-east, Lochmaben on the south-east, Tinwald and Kirkmans on the south, and Closeburn on the west. Many remains of ancient fortifications and Roman roads are visible in this district. A number of ancient coins and other small antiquities have been found. More than half of the parish belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, and the rest is distributed amongst several proprietors. The Ae river bounds the parish on the west, which in 1881 had a population of 849, and in 1891, 808.

The small village of TINWALD, which is situated about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birthplace of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish, the greater part of which is arable, is of a triangular figure, each side of which is about four and a half miles in length, and contains 10,283 acres; the northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. Within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Amisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris. Population in 1881, 861, and in 1891, 902.

The parish of TORTHORWALD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Mousewald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish, by the Lochar water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south, with an acreage of 6,831. The village, which is situated in the north of the parish, is about four miles s.w. from Lochmaben, and the same distance e. from Dumfries. In the vicinity are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwald, supposed to have existed since the 13th century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is the pleasing village of COLLIN, which contains the elevated residence of the late Mrs. Janet Coulthart, from whence extensive views are obtained of the surrounding country; and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish, which in 1881 had a population of 986, and in 1891, 921.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, SAINT MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH, HUTTON AND CORRIE, AND APPEGARTH

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town, in the parish of Dryfes-dale, 67 miles s. of Edinburgh, 12 E. of Dumfries, 11 N.W. of Annan, 6 N.W. of Ecclefechan, and 4 E. of Lochmaben; situated on the great main road between Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles S.E. of the former, and 26½ N.W. of the latter, on the Caledonian railway, for which line there is a station. It is also the junction for Lochmaben and Dumfries. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably for a long period its character was only that of a small hamlet attached to and protected by the residence or a stronghold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufactures have not yet made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. A new Town Hall, in the Scotch baronial style, has been built at a cost (inclusive of site, £1,500) of £8,650; it contains committee rooms and a lesser hall, and in the basement is a large market hall for the accommodation of farmers and others attending the markets. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and another of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are established here; a Bank for savings, opened in 1824, has been eminently successful. There are several good inns. A newspaper called the Annapdale Herald and Moffat News is published here every Thursday, and in Moffat every Friday.

The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High street, and is centrally placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. The free church is a handsome ornament to Bridge street;
there are also United Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Roman Catholic churches. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, and a Masonic lodge. The town is well lighted with gas. A few years ago a considerable sum of money was left by Mr. George Easton, of Chester, towards the erection of a Mechanics' Hall. The building, a stone one, is a neat erection in High street. Large and commodious schools were erected in 1875, by the School Board, at a cost of nearly £5,000. The market is held on Thursday; from the last week of November till the end of April it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there are sometimes sold in a single day from £1,000 to £2,000 worth.
There is also a market for hiring servants on the third Thursday in October (old style). Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August (all old style). The remaining fairs are a new one, established for the sale of cattle, in September, the second Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas (all old style). These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended; the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Borough hill. There are two auction marts belonging to Messrs. Smith and Dalgleish, auctioneers. The population of Lockerbie in 1881 was 2,080.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale, and includes the town of Lockerbie. The extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles, the average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, and of the lower half about one and a half;
about two thirds of the parish is lowland and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of the 10,231 acres in this parish, about 8,000 are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Quhytewoolen Hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,971, and in 1891, 3,332.

HUTTON AND CORRIE is a united parish in the district of Annan-dale, and situated about 6 miles N.E. of Lockerbie. It extends twelve miles in length from north to south, by a general breadth of about three, and is bounded on the east by Eskdalemuir, by Wam-phray and Applegarth on the west, and Tundergarth on the south.
There are two Board schools and an Established church in the parish, which has an area of 23,923 statute acres, and in 1881 it contained a population of 814, and in 1891, 726.

SAINT MUNGO parish is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes; it is distant about 3 miles W. from the village of Ecclefechan, and about the same distance S. from Lockerbie. Castlemilk is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley. This was originally the seat of the ancient lords of Annandale. Much later it belonged to the Maxwells and the Douglasses. It was some time ago purchased from George Armstrong, Esq. by a member of the Jardine family.
In the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the Duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired on that occasion, were found in 1771, when planting a spot, afterwards called "The Cannon Holes." The present proprietor, Sir Robert Jardine, Bart. has erected a new mansion near to the one above mentioned. The Established church is a splendid stone edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, erected at a cost of £5,000; it was opened on the 7th of January, 1876, being the gift of the above-named baronet. There is also a parochial school in the parish, which contains about 4,897 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 653, and in 1891, 603.

TUNDERGARTH, a parish of 10,482 acres, in which a great number of sheep are pastured, is separated from that of Saint Mungo on the west, and is nearly thirteen miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles in its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill called Burnswark overlooks the district from the south. There is an Established church and a parochial school in the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 466, and in 1891, 439.

APPEGARTH (or Applegirth) is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben. In length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward the same. It is bounded by Wamphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village, or hamlet rather, lies on the banks of the Annan, 3 miles N.W. from Lockerbie, and about 11 N.E. from Dumfries. There are a steam saw mill, two railway stations, an Established church, and two parochial schools in the parish. Applegarth and Sibbaldie, which comprise an area of 11,869 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 969, and in 1891, 858.

SIBBALDIE, a small village in the parish of Applegarth, is 3 miles N.

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA, AND WAMPHRAY, AND THE HAMLETS OF CRAIGIELANDS AND HOPPERTOOTHIE.

MOFFAT is a large parish of 42,972 acres, in the interesting district of Annandale. The town, which has been styled the "Baden of Scotland," and is small, airy, cleanly and flourishing, is 51 miles S. of Edinburgh, 57 S.W. of Glasgow, 14½ N. of Lockerbie, 41 N.W. of Carlisle, and 21 N. of Dumfries; situated about one mile and a half from Beattock station, on the Caledonian Railway, from which, in 1882, a short line of railway was made, connecting Moffat with the Caledonian main line from Edinburgh and Glasgow to Carlisle and the South. During the season omnibuses also ply from the Annandale and Buccleuch Arms Hotels to St. Mary's Loch on the Selkirk road, passing Frenchland Tower, the lands of Dumerief (Lord Rollo), Craigieburn, celebrated in song by Burns, Hogg, &c. (the property of J. Prondfoot, Esq., but now the summer residence of Captain Hopegood), Capplehill (Mrs. Johnstone), Bodsbeck Hill, the scene of Hogg's tale of "The Brownie," the "Grey Mare's Tail," sung of in Scott's "Marmion," Loch Skene, a wild and solitary tarn, and are met at St. Mary's Cottage (Tibbie Shiel's) by conveyances from Peebles and Selkirk, whence there are railways. The town stands 378 feet above the level of the sea, and upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of and embraced by a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries-shire, with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north, and east. The huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes; some covered with wood, others beautifully chequered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash, affording shelter and enclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly (though chiefly) pasture. The progress in these pursuits has been of late very remarkable, as shown in the rise in the price of land, and the reputation of the farm stock of the breeders in the neighbourhood.

The principal street of the town (High street) is wide and spacious, laid down upon the principle recommended by the late J. L. M'Adam, and is clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain. It is lined with ranges of excellent shops, well supplied with the necessities and luxuries of life, and even the branch streets are being pressed into the service of commerce. Within the last twenty-five years building has progressed rapidly on the roads leading from the town proper, where there are many beautifully situated villas, cottages, &c., most of which are let furnished to visitors for the season, or a longer period, as may be agreed upon. In November, 1875, an ornamental drinking fountain, consisting of a pedestal of rough sandstone surmounted by the figure of a ram cast in bronze, was erected in the centre of the town; it was the gift of the late William Colvin, Esq., of Craigielands. A short distance from the town is a hydropathic establishment; the building, which is of great extent, is of red sandstone, and has a grand and imposing appearance. It was commenced in June, 1875, and contains nearly two hundred apartments, including dining, billiard, smoking and numerous sitting rooms, &c. It has accommodation for over three hundred visitors, and is one of the handsomest and best conducted establishments of its kind in Scotland. The town commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows and corn fields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which has its source in an extraordinarily strange and wild ravine in this district, namely, the "Devil's Beef Tub," and runs at a distance of about two hundred yards along the south-west of the town, then glides away to meet its neighbouring streams, the Ewan and the Moffat, which unite about five miles below. The surrounding plantations, every year increasing in extent and beauty, the cultured strath, the tree-garnished hill, the legendary turret, the ancient Roman camps and roads, the beautiful walks, and the copse and thicket free to the feet of the visitor, supply the eye with pleasure and the frame with health. About four miles north-west there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road maker, John London M'Adam, died in this town, on the 25th November, 1836, in his 81st year; he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to the locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life. Upon one of his sons was conferred the honour of knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age and growing infirmities. Mr. M'Adam received from Government £10,000, in two separate instalments. To his credit it is recorded that during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer. On the 1st September, 1860, the eminent civil engineer, Joseph Locke, M.P. (born at Athercliffe, 1806), assistant and pupil of George Stephenson, died in Moffat whilst enjoying the sports of the shooting season. There are three principal inns, admirably conducted by their respective proprietors, namely, the Annandale Arms, the Buccleuch Arms, and the Star. There are likewise in the town well-frequented bath-rooms, to which a spacious new room is attached for the use of the visitors; these are under excellent management. The large hall of the bath-room is used for concerts, lectures, &c., and during the summer a subscription band is added to the other attractions, which disperses "the concord of sweet sound" to the promenaders; every Friday evening during the season there is a ball. On the same premises there is a small but neat and well kept tennis lawn, as well as a billiard room. The other chief buildings are Moffat House (the town residence of the superior, J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq. of Annandale), the Established, the Free and the United Presbyterian churches; the latter, a handsome structure, erected at a cost of about £3,000, was opened for worship in July, 1864. The Established church, built and presented to the parishioners in 1796 by the late Earl of Hopetoun, was one of the churches of Annandale transferred to the Bishop of Glasgow, and was constituted one of the prebends of the see. The present structure, the foundation stone of which was laid in August, 1835, and which was opened for public worship in September, 1837, is of Gothic architecture, and is seated for 1,150 persons. The main door is surmounted by a tower rising 107 feet, while at the north, east, and north-west corners there are spirelets over 50 feet high. Internally the church measures 80 feet by 50 feet in the nave, and 61 feet in width at the transept. The pulpit is of a highly ornamental character, being of carved pitch pine set on seven pilars of polished red sandstone. Some of the principal windows—notably the elegant circle above the pulpit—are filled in with stained glass. At the west end a hall has been placed, with vestry on the south and session house on the north side. The hall is lighted by a double mullioned window over the reading desk and single mullioned windows at each side. The church and hall, together with an elegant and commodious manse close by, cost between £12,000 and £15,000, £4,000 of which was subscribed by the congregation, and the remainder provided by the heritors of the parish. The episcopal church is a modern iron building, erected in 1872. The Roman Catholic chapel is a wooden structure, which is open for worship only during the summer season. There are also three branch banks and a savings bank, the Academy, and Morrison's school. There is a subscription library, containing upwards of 4,000 volumes, and two newspapers, the Annandale Herald and Moffat News and the Moffat Times, the former published on Friday and the latter on Saturday, and each containing a visitors' list.

Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort for invalids and pleasure seekers, and for the medicinal virtues of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number, one sulphurous and two chalybeate. The sulphurous spring is distinguished by the name of "Moffat Well," and is about a mile from the town; a very good carriage road leads to it, and during the summer omnibuses ply between it and the town. The "Fons Moffatensis" was described, in Latin in 1659, by Matthew Mackail, as a spring possessing great healing virtues, sufficiently well known to excite interest. It is now nearly 300 years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, and also by visitors from England and in some instances from Ireland; of late the summer visitors have so increased as to be numbered by thousands. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of bilious complaints also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating an appetite and promoting digestion, and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism. It sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain, whither the summer sojourners hie in the morning on foot or by omnibus. Hartfell spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson. It issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat, and may be carried to any distance, but it will not keep good for more than four days. It is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex. The other chalybeate is of a singular nature, and obtained in a very curious manner—namely, by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell called "Gartpool Linn," in the vicinity of the town. The surface of this lake is strongly impregnated with sulphate of alumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently taken in smaller portions—not more than a wine-glassful at a time. The exquisite scenery of this Linn has been laid out in walks by the munificence of the late proprietor, the Hon. Butler Johnstone, and is freely open to the public. The different rivers supply abundant amusement to the trout angler, and the celebrated Alpine lake Loch Skene, whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea, contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the "Grey Mare's Tail," tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about 300 feet above the level of the vale, and which appears from the opposite side of the glen to be one unbroken fall. This is the loftiest fall in the British Islands. It pours its waters into the infant Moffat, which flows on through a grand narrow pass, until it sweeps through the domains of Dumfriesshire, the property of Lord Rollo, and loses itself in the Annan.

Moffat was instituted a burgh by the adoption in 1864 of the Police Act, and now possesses a commission invested with powers for the sanitary improvement of the burgh, the holding of monthly courts, and other matters concerning health and morals. Moffat is the seat of a sheriff small debt (local) court, and justice of peace courts are held on the first Friday of April, August and December. Moffat has been the birth place of several notables—e.g. Nicholas de Moffat, Bishop of Glasgow (1260-1270); Robert Johnstone, LL.D., author of a "History of Scotland," &c.; Walter Boyd, banker, of Boyd, Benfield & Co.; William Dickson, a writer on slavery. William Murray, the chronometrist, and Dr. D. Welsh, moderator of the first Free Church Assembly. The late Peter Johnston, Esq., of Harthope, endowed in the parish a side school, at Evan Water, and a female industrial school, beside the Ladies' Knowe. Friday was the weekly market day, but it is now discontinued, although the farmers meet in great numbers on that day. There are two half-yearly hiring markets; the first is held on the third Friday in March (old style), the second on the Friday after the 19th October. A fair for lambs is held in July, on the Friday after Langholm. There is also an annual sheep and cattle market called the tup fair, in September, on the Friday after the Falkirk tryst, at which time a flower, sheep, cattle, &c. show—or rather a combination of shows—is held, to which by its excellence great crowds are attracted. The district is noted for the breed of cheviots; there is a grand annual sale of rams of that breed on the day before the tup fair. Some choice specimens of stock are always forwarded, and prices per head have repeatedly exceeded 100 guineas. The population of Moffat parish in 1881 was 2,930, and in 1891, 2,977; of the town, 2,291.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-JUXTA derives its name from its vicinity to a chapel, of which the ruins are yet visible, formerly dedicated to the famous missionary, meaning the "lands nigh to the kirk of Saint Patrick." It is situate in the upper district of Annandale, bounded on the north by Moffat, and on the east by Wamphray, and contains 22,355 acres. The celebrated Gartpool Linn is in this parish; likewise the castle of Auchencastle, the ruins of which cover a considerable extent of ground. It was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David "the Bruce," and subsequently was in the possession of Douglas of Morton; its antiquity, therefore is unquestionable. The modern castle of Auchencastle, the residence of William Younger, Esq., is a structure of considerable extent, and splendidly situated on rising ground, near the Evan Water. The old tower of Loch-house is supposed to have been re-built by James Johnstone, of Corehead, chamberlain to Bishop Whitford, of Brechin, whose daughter the chamberlain married, and with her obtained possession of the extensive lands belonging to the bishop in Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Moffat. Loch-house is now inhabited by a cottier or herd, who has his cot within its walls. There are other ruins of ancient edifices, viz. a chapel a little to the n.w. of Moffat, which excites some interest, and is worthy of survey. The summer residence of James Smith, Esq., Craigielands; and Beattock House, a fine modern building, are the only modern mansions of any note in the parish. The parish church is a plain stone edifice, with tower. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture, though it is being rapidly subdued to the plough. CRAIGIELANDS and HOPPERTOOTSIE are hamlets in Kirkpatrick-Juxta. Population of Kirkpatrick-Juxta parish in 1881, 1,064, and in 1891, 967.

JOHNSTONE parish is in the district of Annandale, adjoining Kirkpatrick-Juxta; it is six miles in length, and three in breadth, and contains 13,490 acres. The remains of Lochwood tower, situate at the northern end of the parish, in the centre of a venerable and picturesque wood, and surrounded by impassable bogs, are the only vestiges of antiquity sufficiently interesting to attract attention in the parish. Regarding the now unknown personage by whose orders it was originally erected, James VI. is recorded to have remarked that "however honest he might have been in outward appearance, he must have been a rogue at heart." Robert, natural brother to the chieftain, Lord John Maxwell, of Nithsdale, burnt it in savage glee in the sixteenth century, during the clanish quarrel which resulted in the battle of the Dryfe Lands, John James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale, is proprietor, and occupies an elegant mansion called Raehills, the only notable residence in the parish. There is nothing peculiar to be observed respecting this local portion of the district, further than that (on the authority of a late reverend minister) "in this populous rural parish there is neither public-house, nor meeting-house, nor village, nor prison, nor lawyer, nor beggar," all of which is true still. It has four well-conducted schools, and the educational, moral, and religious interests of the parish are carefully and efficiently attended to. The heritors of this parish erected, in 1862, a parochial school, with house for the master, and library attached, at a cost of £550; the library contains over one thousand volumes. Population of Johnstone parish in 1881, 1,002, and in 1891, 927.

The parish of WAMPFRAY receives its name from its situation emphatically expressed by the Gaelic word Uam-hri signifying "the den in the forest." Agreeably to this etymology, the church stands in a deep woody recess, by the side of Wamphray Water, which brawls and thunders its way through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks clad with thriving plantations, or by the lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and sportively adorned by saplings of ash rising from their interstices. This parish adjoins Kirkpatrick-Juxta and Johnstone; it is of an oblong figure, six miles and a half in length, by three in breadth, with an acreage of 18,183. There are but four resident proprietors. The Caledonian Railway runs through the parish, and has a station here. Population in 1881, 455 and in 1891, 458.

RUTHWELL,

CARRUTHERSTOWN, CLARENCEFIELD, CUMMERTREES, DALTON, MOUSWALD, POWFOOT, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RUTHWELL is a parish and village—the latter about 7 miles w. from Annan, 10 s.e. from Dumfries, and 2 from Ruthwell station. This place is a barony, and is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants availed themselves of these rights. It was in early days celebrated for the manufacture of salt; but this art has not been practised for some time. Near the shore is the brow, well and hamlet, where Burns spent several of the last weeks of his existence. The kirk and manse of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from that village. In 1887 the ancient Runic monument, so dear to antiquarians, which stood in the manse grounds, was removed therefrom, and for better preservation placed in a new wing built into the church, admission to which is at all times free. Close to Ruthwell station is the new post office, erected in 1886, which is the postal centre of a wide district. About a mile from Ruthwell, in the parish of MOUSWALD, at Mount Kedar, is a Free church, and close to which stands a monument erected to the memory of the Rev. Henry Ducau, B.D., late minister of Ruthwell. The memorial, which is of stone, consists of an arched base and pyramid, forty feet in height; on the base an inscription states that he was the founder of the system of savings banks, and was born in 1774, and died in 1846, after being minister of Ruthwell parish for forty-four years, when he closed in communion with the Free Church of Scotland. About a mile from the station is Comlongon Castle, an ancient border keep, and a modern mansion, now the residence of Arthur Johnstone-Douglas, Esq., J.P., C.C., one of the seats of the Murrays of Cochrane, now Earls of Mansfield. The parish of Ruthwell has an area of 8,693 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 868, and in 1891, 858.

CLARENCEFIELD is a neat village in Ruthwell parish situated about a mile from Ruthwell station, between there and the village of that name. There is a public school here.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village—the latter 4 miles w. from Annan, situated on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, on which line there is a station at the village. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, containing 9,466 acres, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Firth. It is a flat, fertile and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village. The parish church is situated in the village, and there is also a public school. About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is Powfoot, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,094, and in 1891, 1,079.

DALTON is a parish and small village about 6 miles s.s.w. from Lockerbie, and 4 n.e. from Ruthwell station. The parish, which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth, with about 6,886 acres. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons. The parish church and a Free church are in the village, also a public school. In the churchyard are several ancient tombstones to the memory of the Ross family, descendants of the ennobled house of Ross of Halkhead, who were long residents in this parish. About a mile from the village is Dormont House, beautifully situated within a deer park on the banks of the Annan, the seat of W. F. Carruthers, Esq. CARRUTHERSTOWN is a small village in this parish about 2 miles s.w. from Dalton, and the same distance n.e. from Ruthwell station. Population of the parish in 1881, 579, being about the same in 1891.

MOUSWALD is a parish and village—the latter about 6 miles s.e. from Dumfries, lying between the town and Annan. The kirk, which is close to the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, long since laird of Mouswald. There is a public school here. In 1887 William F. Carruthers, Esq., of Dormont, proprietor of the village, introduced a gravitation supply of water, and presented it to the inhabitants. Ruthwell and Kacks are the nearest stations, each about two-and-a-half miles distant. Acreage, 5,889. Population in 1881, 558, and in 1891, 500.

CRAWICK, KIRKCONNEL, MENNOCK BRIDGE, WANLOCKHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SANQUHAR is a large parish of 40,846 acres, in the district of Nithsdale. The town, an ancient one, erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh by charter from James VI. in 1596, is 56 miles S.W. of Edinburgh, the same distance S. by E. of Glasgow, 32 S.E. of Ayr, and 26 N.W. of Dumfries; situated on the left bank of the Nith, and on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, on which line there is a station. Sanquhar, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It was a few years ago excavated with great care by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, and many interesting objects were found, including several human skeletons and a well of great depth with a bucket suspended in it. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Crichton, ancestors of the Marquis of Bute, who holds the title of Lord Sanquhar. The castle, as well as the greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile from it stands the house of Elock, the residence of the family of Veitch, who gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim to the honour of being the birthplace of the "Admirable Crichton." The town consists chiefly of one main street. The Town Hall stands at the end of High street, and has a tower with a clock. In 1882 a handsome public hall was erected, at a cost of £1,500. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts. The coalfield extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleuch is the chief proprietor. There are two manufactories for spades and shovels, one at Crawick and one near the railway station, and there are also two brick and tile works in the town. The British Linen Company and the Royal Bank of Scotland have branches here, and there is also a District Savings Bank. The town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and four councillors; and, in conjunction with Dumfries, Annan, Kirkcubright, and Lochmaben, sends one member to Parliament, the present representative being Robert T. Reid, Esq.

The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, and one for the Evangelical Union or Morrisonian body. The parish church, which was erected in 1823, on the site of an older one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground. The executors of the late James Crichton, of Friar's Carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, appropriated £2,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar. In 1885, by an order of the Educational Endowment Commissioners, this school was discontinued, and the net proceeds of the endowment applied, through the

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CARRON BRIDGE, CLOSEBURN, DURISDEER, GLENCAIRN, KEIR, MONIAIVE, MORTON, PENFON T AND TYNRON.

THORNHILL is a very respectable and considerable village in the parish of Morton, 66 miles s. by E. of Glasgow, 48 n.w. of Carlisle, 40 n.e. of Newton Stuart, 44 s.e. of Kilmarnock, 30 n.w. of Annan, the same distance S.E. of Cumnock, 22 n.e. of New Galloway, 11 n.w. of Dumfries, and 12 s.e. of Sanquhar. It is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and is charmingly situated towards the centre of the extensive amphitheatre of hills which include Middle Nithsdale, with the river Nith winding through the valley. About 4 miles from Thornhill is Drumlanrig Castle, the noble mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry; it is beautifully situated on rising ground on the right bank of the river, overlooking the whole district. Within the last half century the woods around the castle have been greatly extended, and now cover a large portion of country. The gardens and pleasure grounds of the castle are very beautiful; they are kept with great care, and are free to the inspection of visitors on Tuesday and Friday. The castle was rebuilt by William, first Duke of Queensberry, between the years 1679 and 1689, and it is said the expense incurred in building was so great that the Duke, not wishing that anyone should inspect the accounts connected with it, wrote upon them, "the devil pyke out his een wha looks herein." It is also related that the Duke only slept one night in the castle that had cost him so much in erecting. Some of the remains of a very ancient building, which was called the House of the Hassock, and on the site of which the present castle was built, may still be traced. In the year 1776, when Mr. Pennant visited Drumlanrig, there was a breed of wild cattle in the woods, which are described as being of a milk-white colour, with black ears and finely curved horns. It is said they were removed to Chillingham Castle in Northumberland, where the breed still exists, as well as at Hamilton. Within a mile of Drumlanrig Castle are the ruins of a very ancient castle, which a few years ago were excavated with great care, by order of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch. This is Tibber's Castle, which appears to have been destroyed in the time of Bruce, and is referred to in Blind Harry's metrical history of Sir William Wallace. About three miles from Thornhill are the very fine ruins of Morton Castle. It is very ancient, having been under the care of Sir Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray, during the minority of David Bruce. The ruins and the surrounding scenery are very picturesque, and have formed a study for several distinguished painters, viz., Thomson of Duddingston and Horatio McCulloch. The remains of Roman encampments and, in the high grounds, of ancient British encampments, are very numerous over the whole district, and at one time there were many cairns of stones. About three miles from Thornhill, in the parish of Closeburn, there is a very remarkable ravine, worn out of the soft sandstone by a small rivulet. This is Crichope Linn, classical from the writings of Sir Walter Scott, in which it is described as being the hiding place of Balfour of Burleigh. This place, as well as almost every glen in the district, has associations connected with the times of the persecuted covenanters. The whole of the district may also be said to form part of "the land o' Burns." Over it he travelled while engaged in the duties of the excise, and many of his finest poems are connected with it.

The village of Thornhill is in a very salubrious situation, the streets are wide, and the houses are neatly disposed. The land belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. In Thornhill is a society of young men, having for their object the diffusion of knowledge among the people by means of public lectures. There is also a public library containing about 1,000 volumes, several benevolent societies, a musical club, a bowling green, a lawn tennis court, &c.; there is also a museum of natural history and antiquities. The building, which was erected in 1869, is surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds, in which there is an extensive collection of plants, shrubs and trees. In the grounds of the museum is a very good statue of Richard Cameron, the noted Covenanter, who fell fighting at Airdsmoss, Ayrshire, when his head was cut off and conveyed to Edinburgh, and there placed on the Nether bow. The statue is the work of the late Mr. Currie, sculptor, Dumfries. The Nithsdale Auction Company, Limited, hold sales for live stock at their mart adjoining the railway station, weekly on Saturday. The Nithsdale Agricultural Society's show is held on the third Tuesday of September, annually. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature; there is, however, a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable hotels in the south of Scotland; they are the Buccleuch and Queensberry and the George. The parish church, which was erected in 1781, was situated about a mile and a half from Morton Castle, but as the population had congregated at Thornhill in later years, it was taken down and a handsome one built in 1840, near the village, by the Duke of Buccleuch, at a cost of £3,550, affording accommodation for 1,200 persons. There are also places of worship for the United Presbyterian and Evangelical Union bodies. At GATELAW BRIDGE, about two miles from Thornhill, is the Union Poorhouse, which serves for the ten adjoining parishes. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in February (old style), and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers. The population of Thornhill in 1881 was 1,289, and in 1891, 1,348.

The parish of MORTON extends from the left bank of the Nith, north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between 6 and 7 miles, by a breadth of about 4, its contents being 8,036 acres. It is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn; it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, it is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and the Cample streams pass through the parish, the whole of which belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, exclusive of one small property. Population in 1881, 2,118, and in 1891, 1,852.

The parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends 11 miles in length, by from 3 to 5 in breadth, containing about 30,083 acres. The western and northern divisions are mountainous and pastoral. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, to which the elegant mansion and grounds of Colonel Walker contribute greatly. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name. The church is situate at a short distance from the site of an older edifice. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,737, and in 1891, 1,647.

MONIAIVE, a considerable and pleasant village in the parish of Glencairn, is 16 miles n.w. from Dumfries, and 8 s.w. from Thornhill. The business of Moniaive is of a domestic nature, and chiefly supported by the many gentry and respectable farmers of the surrounding neighbourhood. The Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch established here, which supplies the monetary requirements of the village. There are also two respectable inns, the Craigdarroch Arms and the George. Moniaive is a place of some antiquity, and formerly of more consequence than it is now, having been a burgh of barony, chartered in the reign of Charles I. It was in this district that several martyrs suffered at the time of the Reformation, and in 'his neighbourhood' may be seen various testimonials to their memory. One very handsome monument, erected on an eminence near the village, bears the following inscription:—"In memory of the late Rev. James Renwick, the last who suffered death for attachment to the covenanted cause of Christ in Scotland. Born near this spot, 15th Feby., 1662, and executed at the Grass Market, Edinburgh, 17th Feby., 1688. Erected by subscription, 1828." There is a Free Church and one for United Presbyterians, also a public school in the village. Situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, which is here crossed by a bridge, is DUNREGGAN, now a suburb of Moniaive. Thornhill is the nearest railway station, 9 miles distant. The population of Moniaive, including Dunreggan, was in 1881, 676, and in 1891, 624.

CLOSEBURN is a village and parish in the district of Nithsdale, it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about 10 miles in length by about 11½ in breadth, and contains about 29,102 acres. The village is situated about 2 miles s.e. from Thornhill, and is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of the late George Baird, Esq., and now in the hands of the trustees, form an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls. The most prominent architectural feature in the parish is the baronial mansion, Closeburn Hall, a large and splendid Grecian edifice. A school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish. Mr. John Stevens, M.A., is the master. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. Near Closeburn Castle is a strong sulphurous spring, of the same character as Moffat Well. There is also another called Townsleugh Well, which is chalybeate. The population of the united parishes of Closeburn and Dalgarno in 1881 was 1,505, and in 1891, 1,338.

CARRON BRIDGE, a village in the parishes of Morton and Durisdeer, stands on the river Carron, on the road from Sanquhar to Dumfries, a mile and three quarters n.w. of Thornhill; it contains a school, built and supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. There is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, about 2 miles n. from the village.

PENFON T PARISH, containing 21,961 acres, gives name to a presbytery. It is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds; the latter description of land is found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about 2 miles s.w. from Thornhill. The church, contiguous to the village, and rebuilt in 1872, is a handsome edifice of sandstone, with clock, tower and spire. There are also places of worship for the Reformed and United Presbyterians, also Free Churches and a public school. The Glenquharren Craig, rising to a great height, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, &c. Thornhill is the nearest station, 3 miles distant. Population in 1881, 1,176, and in 1891, 1,065.

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is 8 miles in length and 6 in breadth, with an acreage of about 19,717. The village is distant about 6 miles n. of Thornhill. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the seat of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Adjoining the parish church is the sepulchral vault of the Drumlanrig Douglasses; over it is a magnificent marble monument and two sculptured figures in the Rouilliac taste, representing James, second Duke of Queensberry, and his Duchess; this monument was brought from Rome. Carron Bridge is the nearest station, about 2 miles distant. Population in 1881, 1,107, and the same in 1891.

KEIR is a parish of about 7,860 acres, possessing a considerable quantity of plantation and limes one; it is bounded on the east by Closeburn, on the north-west and north by Tynron and Penpont, and on the south by Danscore; its length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 2½. The village is 3 miles s.w. from Thornhill. One-half of the parish is arable, and the other half is divided into pasture, meadow and woodlands, Capenoch, the residence of Mrs. E. F. Gladstone, is situated in the parish. There is a church belonging to the Establishment, and public schools. Thornhill is the nearest railway station, 4 miles distant. Population in 1881, 745.

TYNRON parish lies between Penpont on the north and north-east, and Glencairn on the south, and extends 2 miles in length, by a breadth of from 2 to 3, with an acreage of about 15,633. The village, which is 5 miles s.w. from Thornhill, contains the parish church and a public school. The parish is watered partially by the Shinuel rivulet, along the banks of which there is some pleasing scenery. Near the eastern extremity of the parish rises the Doon of Tynron, a conspicuous pyramidal hill, near the summit of which is an ancient castle. Thornhill is the nearest railway station, 6 miles distant. Population in 1881, 416, and in 1891, 359.

EDINBURGHSHIRE.

THE County of EDINBURGH, or MID-LOTHIAN, lies in the southern division of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth (an arm of the German ocean); by Linlithgowshire, or West-Lothian, on the west; by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and Selkirk on the south; and by Haddingtonshire, or East-Lothian, with small portions of Berwickshire and Roxburghshire on the east. The length of the county, from east to west, is about thirty-six miles; and its breadth, from its extreme apex on the south, to near Musselburgh on the north, where the eastern extremity of the county abuts on Haddingtonshire, is about twenty-four miles. In figure, which is very irregular, it may be said to describe the segment of a circle, indented on its southern boundary by the counties of Berwick and Selkirk, and on its south-western verge by Lanarkshire. It contains about 352 square miles, or 231,724 acres. This county in size ranks as the twenty-second, and in population as the second.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In respect to the appellation "Edinburgh," all the information that can be obtained on the subject, from the obscurity of ages, is furnished in the description of the capital; while that of the "Lothian" will be given in the present article. In the first century of the Christian era, it is district of Scotland, according to best authorities, (including the Messrs. Chambers, from whose valuable topography we have drawn largely), was inhabited by tribes of Ottadini and Gadeni, the British descendants of those enterprising foreign Celts who had first landed in the island. The Roman legions entered Edinburghshire about the year A.D. 80, when Agricola formed a chain of forts across the isthmus of land between the estuaries of the Clyde and Forth. We shall pass over the imperfect history of the wars of the natives and their irresistible enemies, the Romans, who finally secured the space they had at first marked down as their own. The skilful general who restored the Roman power was Theodosius, under the Emperor Valentinian I., who in compliment to his imperial master, entitled the extensive district he had thus conquered the province of Valentiniana, which this warlike people retained possession of for three hundred and sixty years. During their residence they reared altars, baths, granaries, and other works of art, still occasionally seen, and left those coins and weapons which from time to time are exposed in turning up the surface of the soil. The exigencies of the state at length required their presence nearer the capital, but it was with extreme regret that they abandoned their settlement. The date of their abdication is 446, and the epoch of the re-subversion of the Romanised Ottadini by Saxon invaders is only three years later. After a century of hard fighting, the superior genius of the Saxon Ida fixed this new race in those districts now comprehended in the shires of Berwick, part of Roxburgh, Haddington, Linlithgow, and a portion of Stirling. In the course of time this province obtained the distinctive appellation of Lothian, Lothene, and more recently LOTHIAN. The origin of this title has occasioned much controversy, without arriving at a satisfactory conclusion upon its derivation. In common speech the district is to this day called Loudian or Louden; thus the proper pronunciation is more correct, as regards etymology, than that which is in use among writers. Every foot of ground covered by the metropolis and its environs has been the scene of warlike strife, frequently involving the fate of the Kingdom. In the struggle which Edward III. maintained for the restoration of the Balliol dynasty, one of the most sanguinary battles was fought on the Borough-moor of the metropolis. In 1355 Mid-Lothian was subjected to the horrors of pillage and conflagration, in the expedition of Richard II.; and a century and a half later it suffered much from the invasion of the English, on account of the treaty of marriage between the son of Henry VIII. and the young Queen of Scots. The county was, soon after, the scene of many of the insurrectionary movements against the authority of Queen Mary, particularly that at Carberry Hill. Of the many interesting events connected with this county, the metropolis of it has been the nucleus; and our historical notice of Edinburgh, therefore, will present many details.

SURFACE, SOIL, AND CLIMATE.—The greater portion of the county is, if not mountainous, hilly, and in many places wild, and pastoral. The most prominent rising grounds are the Pentland Hills, and the following eminences, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—Moorfoot Hills, 1,850 feet; Carrketton (Pentland range), 1,555; Spital Hill, 1,360; Arthur's Seat (from its base, 700), 796; House of Whim, 884; Woodhouslee, 729; Dalmahoy Hill, 680; summit of Braid Hills, 630; Penicuik, 586; Salisbury Crags, 550; Craig Lockhart Hill, 540; Battery of Edinburgh Castle, 510; Corstorphine Hill, 470; Calton Hill, 350; and Dalkeith, 200. It is ascertained that by the close of the eleventh century, agriculture had made some progress in the district of Mid-Lothian. During the last and present century much has been accomplished in this part in rearing plantations; but it is to the society of Improvers, formed at Edinburgh about the year 1723, that this county is mainly indebted for its advancement in agriculture. In 1744 potatoes were first raised in fields, and in about thirty years afterwards their cultivation was completely established in the county. The agriculture of Mid-Lothian, now conducted in the best manner that science can suggest or capital render efficient, is vigorously prosecuted in the valleys of the rivers; the upland districts being unsuitable for agriculture, thus causing more attention to be devoted to sheep farming. Upon the whole it may be remarked, with regard to the soil of this county and its management, that a very active spirit of improvement everywhere prevails; cultivation is rapidly ascending the hills, while the boggy grounds are gradually undergoing a process of drainage. The universally prevalent system of leases here, generally for nineteen years, gives the tenant farmers of Scotland an independence which tenants at will, or from year to year, cannot have, and enables them with confidence to expend money on the land. The CLIMATE is, upon the whole, salubrious, and not unfavourable to vegetation, its greatest drawback being its variability.

MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, AND COMMERCE.—The county abounds in several valuable minerals, especially coal, sandstone, limestone, and whinstone. In the western part is an extensive coal field, and the eastern contains inexhaustible and rich beds of this valuable mineral, extending from the shore at Musselburgh, on both sides of the North Esk, about fifteen miles inward, to the head of that stream at Carlops, on the confines of Tweeddale. In the parish of Calder are extensive beds of rich bituminous shale, from which paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted. Mid-Lothian possesses sandstone of different kinds, and of an excellent quality. The quarries of Edinburghshire have long enjoyed a pre-eminence which cannot be so effectually indicated by anything as by the appearance of the New Town of Edinburgh. The works of Craiglith and Hailes, near the city, may be justly considered objects of curiosity. Almost all the houses of the New Town, besides other buildings, have been reared from the former mine. There are several other quarries of inferior note throughout the county. Lead was, in former times, found at the head of the North Esk, on the south side of the Pentland Hills. A vein of copper is said to exist in the parish of Currie, but it has never been worked. The MANUFACTURES of Edinburghshire cannot be traced to a remote date, and have never been remarkable for their extent. It is but little more than a century since that the fabrication of linen was known in the county. In Edinburgh, Leith, and Musselburgh there are now numerous manufactories of goods of different kinds, which will be found under their appropriate heads in the Directory of these places. The principal articles manufactured in the shire for exportation, either by out-ports or inland, beside Scotch linens, are glass, soap, salt, candles, refined sugar, ale, whisky, leather, bricks, tiles, pottery, iron, chemical preparations, printing ink and materials, paper, and books. The manufacture of paper became first known in Scotland in this county, and the district still possesses large establishments employed in the manufacture of this invaluable material, chiefly situated at Penicuik, and in the neighbourhood of Colinton and Lasswade. Paraffin oil has also become an important manufacture at Mid and West Calder. The maritime traffic of the county, which is very considerable, is concentrated at Leith, the only port suitable to the entrance of large vessels, and indeed the only one of any kind except those of Fisherrow, or Musselburgh, Newhaven, and the rising port of Granton. The Union canal, 31 miles in length, proceeding to the west from Edinburgh, conveys large quantities of coals and various kinds of goods to the city.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—This county does not possess any large rivers. This deficiency, however, is of little or no importance, in consequence of being placed on the margin of a broad and navigable firth. Next the Forth, the Esk may be said to be the chief river; it is composed of two streams, which unite their waters below Dalkeith, and glide into the Forth at Musselburgh. The Leith, a valuable small river, takes its rise on the north side of the Pentland Hills, and after receiving several rivulets, discharges its waters, after a course of nineteen miles, into the Forth. The Almond, the most westerly stream, rises in the high grounds on the borders of Lanarkshire; it is joined by the Brierch Burn, in its way to the Forth, which it enters at Cramond.—RAILWAYS.—The shire of Edinburgh is extensively interested in the system of railways, which radiate from Edinburgh. No town or considerable village in the county is now destitute of the advantages of railway communication.

CIVIL DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This district became subject to the government of a sheriff prior to the reign of David I. The office of sheriff of Edinburgh seems to have been at all times an appointment of great trust and dignity; and from the thirteenth to the eighteenth century was filled by the heads of families of note in the shire and its vicinity. The county, which is divided into 32 parishes, is now governed and its affairs conducted by the usual number of functionaries, distributed over six districts. Besides Edinburgh, the shire does not comprise any royal burghs, but possesses three of regality, namely, Musselburgh, Canongate, and Portsburgh and the town of Leith. Its only burgh of barony is Dalkeith. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Right Hon. the Earl of Rosebery. The contributory burghs belonging to this county represent in Parliament are Leith, Musselburgh, and Portobello. The county at large sends one member to Parliament, its present representative being the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. Up to the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, the city of Edinburgh returned two members, but was then separated into four divisions and given two additional representatives. The gentlemen at present sitting are:—East Division, Robert Wallace, Esq.; West Division, Viscount Wolmer; Central Division, William McEwan, Esq.; South Division, Herbert Woodfield Paul, Esq. The parliamentary constituency of the county numbered in 1891-92, 13,234.

By the census returns presented to Government in 1881, the entire county contained a population of 889,164 persons, and by those for 1891, 1,444,055, showing an increase in the ten years of 54,891. The valuation for 1891-2 (exclusive of railways and waterworks) was £573,343; and of railways and waterworks (exclusive of portions situated within burghs), £129,284.

CALDER—MID, EAST, AND WEST.

MID-CALDER is a parish and village—the latter 12 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, and 8½ E. from Whitburn; pleasantly situated on the road from Glasgow to Edinburgh, on an eminence between the water of Linthouse, and the Almond; and Calder wood, which is of considerable extent, overhangs it. The minerals in this parish consist of various beds of rich, bituminous shale, from which a large quantity of paraffin oil and other chemical products are extracted at the different works. Coal abounds in the parish, and on the estate of Calder House, the property of Lord Torphichen, is an extensive bed of freestone of excellent quality. The parish church is a fine specimen of Gothic architecture, enlarged and restored at a cost of upwards of £3,000. It was originally founded by Duncan, Earl of Fife, in the early part of the thirteenth century, and was rebuilt on the original site by Peter Sandilands, a scion of the noble family of Torphichen, in 1541. A United Presbyterian church is the only other place of worship. To the west of the village is Calder House, the seat of Lord Torphichen, where the picture of John Knox is hung in the hall in which he first dispensed the sacrament of the Lord's supper after the Reformation. The house of Greenbank, in the vicinity, is celebrated as the birth-place of John Spottiswoode, Archbishop of St. Andrews. Fairs are held in this village on the second Tuesday in March, and Friday after second Tuesday in October. Acreage of the parish 12,294. Population in 1881, 1,695, and in 1891, 3,125.

EAST CALDER is a small village, lying one mile E. from Mid-Calder, on the south road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. It was originally a parish of itself, but is now conjoined with Kirknewton. At the west end of the village are to be seen the ruins of the ancient parish church, built by Randolph de Clere, in the twelfth century, and dedicated to St. Cathbert. A United Presbyterian church, of Gothic architecture, has been erected in the village at a cost of £2,000. There is also a Board school. Population in 1881, 731.

WEST CALDER is a village in the rather extensive parish of its name, the latter being about 10 miles in length and 5½ in breadth. The village is about 5 miles s.s.w. from Mid-Calder, and 16½ s.w. from Edinburgh. It contains Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches and a Roman Catholic chapel. Until within the last twenty years no trade of any importance was carried on; but about that time Mr. James Young, the patentee of the paraffin oil, having purchased several large properties in the parish, which contains several beds of rich bituminous shale, erected one of the largest works in Great Britain for the manufacture of oil. In consequence of these operations the parish has more than quadrupled its population within the above period, and a new village has sprung up towards the west. In the immediate vicinity, at a place called Castle Craig, are the traces of a Roman encampment. In 1881 the entire parish, which has an area of 21,089 acres, had a population of 7,681 persons, and in 1891, 8,456.

COLINTON,

BALERNO, CURRIE, HERMISTON, JUNIPER GREEN, KIRKNEWTON, AND SLATEFORD.

COLINTON, or Collington, is a village and parish, the latter lying at the base of the Pentland Hills, part of which it includes. The grounds rise beautifully from the vale of Corstorphine, and are finely cultivated, enclosed, and planted; the water of Leith passes through them, and its banks are here romantic and wooded. The church and manse of Colinton, standing in the midst of lovely scenery, are 4 miles s.w. of Edinburgh. Bonaly Tower, the seat of the late Lord Cockburn, is in this parish, and is now the residence of Mrs. E. J. Simpson. The manufacture of paper is carried on extensively, and the district abounds with limestone and fire stone. On the lands of Colinton, which lie to the east, are vestiges of a very extensive encampment, near which is a rude massive block of whinstone, called "Camussione," said to indicate the burial place of some Danish commander. On these lands the fountain for the Edinburgh water-cistern was first erected, Logan House Hill, in this parish, is a considerable eminence, rising upwards of 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. SLATEFORD is a village in this parish. Acreage of the parish, 5,640. Population in 1881, 4,847, and in 1891, 4,549.

The parish of CURRIE is bounded by Corstorphine and Ratho on the north, Colinton on the west, and the Pentland Hills skirt it on the south. Through the low ground run the water of Leith, and on its northern banks, six miles distant s.w. from Edinburgh, stands the village of CURRIE, through which the road to Lanark passes. The church is erected on a very commanding situation. The manufacture of paper and snuff prevails in this parish to some extent, the former particularly. On the estate of Maleny, beyond Currie, and rising above the banks of the Leith, is Lennox Tower, anciently the residence of the family of Lennox, as well as the occasional one of Mary Queen of Scots. At a short distance from it, on the opposite bank of the river, are the ruins of another ancient edifice, once the mansion of the Skenes, o Currie hill. The parish also contains the house of Baberton, which is remarkable as having been used as a hunting seat by royalty at two distant periods—first by James VI. of Scotland, previous to his accession to the English throne, and secondly by Charles X. of France, after his expulsion from his dominions in 1830. Acreage, 12,103. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,890, and in 1891, 2,574.

KIRKNEWTON, about 9 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, is a small village and parish; the latter, which includes the abrogated parochial division of Calder Clere, is bounded on the south and west by Mid-Calder, on the east by Currie and Ratho, and on the north by Slateford. In the burial ground of the church, which is about half a mile distant from the village, he interred the remains of the celebrated Dr. William Cullen, who was proprietor of the estate of Ormistonhill, where he introduced, so early as the year 1758, an improved mode of culture. The river Almond, the water of Leith, and the great Glasgow road intersect the parish, which abounds with excellent limestone, and contains some fine seats and pleasure grounds; one of these is called Meadowbank, once the residence of a late senator of the College of Justice, entitled Lord Meadowbank, who was one of the chief improvers of this neighbourhood. Population of the village, in 1881, 368.

BALERNO is a village in the parish of Currie, on the water of Leith, and situated about 6 miles s.w. from Edinburgh. There is a Board school in the village, also mills for the manufacture of paper. HERMISTON is a village in the above parish. Population in 1881, 474, and in 1891, 694.

JUNIPER GREEN is a small village in the parish of Colinton, and about 3 miles s.s.w. of Edinburgh. Population in 1881, 1,018.

CORSTORPHINE AND GOGAR.

CORSTORPHINE is a village and parish, the latter, which commences about two miles to the west of Edinburgh, presenting on the whole, a remarkably level surface, the only eminences being its conical hill, not exceeding in altitude 470 feet above the level of the sea. The southern side of these hills is beautifully decorated with villas and well enclosed plantations. The whole of the parish consists of rich arable land, part of which is cultivated by agriculturists and market gardeners, and the other also many dairy farms. The village of Corstorphine is 8 miles W. from Edinburgh, on the high road to Glasgow, in a very pleasant situation;
that of the church is particularly picturesque, and the building itself is interesting from its antiquity and associations. The church was not the original parish one, having been established in the year 1429, as a provosty or Collegiate church, which rose into importance, while the old parish church declined and finally fell into ruins. It was founded by Sir Adam Forrester, and endowments were supplied by himself and afterwards by his widow, their son, Sir John Forrester, also adding to the foundation. On the outer wall of the church the arms of the Forresters are found in several places, and the effigies of members of this family and their wives are carved in stone in life-size, and occupy niches in the chancel of the church.

These and other memorials of a past age are still entire, and from their antiquity and variety must be considered eminently worthy of a visit. There are Established and free churches, and also a Board school in the village, which also possesses a good subscription library of over 2,000 volumes, which proves of great benefit to the district. There is a station on the line of the North British railway, about half a mile from the village. Acreage of the parish, 3,654.
Population in 1881, 2,156, and in 1891, 2,382, of which the village contained 1,100.

GOGAR, formerly an independent parish, is a pleasant hamlet in the parish of Corstorphine, situated on the banks of the Gogar burn, a tributary rivulet of the water of Leith, 5 miles S.W. from Edinburgh. Here stood a church previous to the Reformation, upon the ruins of which a church has recently been built and where services are now held. There is a station on the line of the North British railway, about three quarters of a mile from the village.

DALKEITH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF NEWBATTLE, NEWTON, AND MILLERHILL.

DALKEITH is a busy and populous market town, a burgh of barony, and a parish 6 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, and is a station on the Waverley line of the North British railway. It occupies an exceedingly delightful and dry situation, in a fertile district, diversified with hill, dale, and wood, with the North and South Esk flowing round the place. It is the most important landward town in the county, and has been long celebrated for its weekly corn market, held on Thursday. At one period this market was the largest in Scotland, but since the concentration of so many railways was effected in the capital, the Edinburgh grain market has greatly exceeded in magnitude all others. Since 1854 the market has been held in a covered building, one of the finest and most commodious structures of the kind in Scotland, the large hall being 172 feet long, 50 feet wide and 45 feet high. It was erected at a cost of nearly £4,000. Prior to the formation of the Edinburgh and Hawick railway, the grain was all brought to the market in carts, but now only sample bags are sent to market, sales being made from these and the stock forwarded by rail to the buyer. The progressive increase of the banking establishments in Dalkeith may be considered a fair exponent of its business importance. The Commercial Bank opened an agency here in 1810; the National Bank in 1825; the Royal Bank in 1836; and the Edinburgh and Leith afterwards; the Edinburgh and Glasgow in 1839, but which merged in the Clydesdale in 1858. In 1829 a National Security Savings Bank was established, which is well supported, and has proved a great boon to the humble and frugal portion of the community. There is also a well-conducted Penny Bank, equally useful in its more limited sphere. The district around Dalkeith abounds with coal, which is of excellent quality, and is worked to a great extent. Mushets Limited, ironfounders, afford employment to a large number of people, whilst Messrs. Stewart Brothers, of the Eskbank Carpet Works, give occupation to upwards of three hundred hands. These, together with its markets, may be mentioned among the chief sources of the town's characteristic animation and prosperity. There are, however, various other agencies which operate in the same direction, as Mr. Dawson's brush factory, Mr. Hope's brass works, Mr. Harry's machine works, Messrs. A. & W. Douglas's corn mills, Messrs. M'Leilan and Urquhart's brewery, &c. Midlothian is famous for the excellence of its oatmeal, and Dalkeith mills have long been identified with the production of the best quality of this valuable and wholesome article of national food. It is proper to mention, too, that Dalkeith owes not a little to the activity and enterprise of its mercantile class, the amount of the wholesale and retail business in grocery, ironmongery, and drapery establishments being probably greater than any other Scottish town of similar size. The town has been very much improved during the past thirty years. The inhabitants suffered formerly from deficiency of water; but an ample supply, of excellent quality, was, in 1838, obtained within the burgh bounds by boring, the quantity thus secured being 65,000 gallons every 24 hours. The foundations of the commercial prosperity of Dalkeith were laid towards the beginning of the present century by the late Mr. John Gray, merchant; and the material advantages he bestowed have been worthily followed up in other departments of public and social progress and amelioration by its first provost, Mr. Alexander Mitchell, of whom, and of Mr. Gray, it may be said that they found Dalkeith "brick, and left it marble."

The municipal management is vested in a board of twelve Commissioners, under the Police Improvement (Scotland) Act, who have the power to assess and regulate local taxes—such as the paving, lighting and water rates, &c. A sheriff court is held in the Foresters' Hall, for cases under the Small Debt Act and Certain Debts Recovery Act, on the third Thursday of every month (September excepted), and a police court at the Police Barracks, on the second and fourth Mondays of every month, and other days, as cases may require. There are eleven places of public worship, namely, two Established, one Episcopal, one Roman Catholic, two United Presbyterian, one Free, one Congregational, one Wesleyan, one Baptist, and one Evangelical Union, or Morristonian. There are three Board schools and several private ones. As indications of social and literary activity, it may be mentioned that the Scientific Association, which was formed in 1835, continues with undiminished spirit and success, and possesses a large and valuable library. The great impulse to pauperism in Scotland by the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1845 led here, as elsewhere, to the erection of a workhouse, in order to furnish a test of poverty, and provide a suitable refuge for the destitute and infirm. The Dalkeith Union Workhouse was the first of such houses in Scotland; it was opened in 1849 for the poor of four parishes, but there are now twelve parishes in combination. The cost of the building, which is capable of accommodating 120 inmates, was £4,058 13s. 10d., and this sum with the interest was paid off in ten years instalments. Dalkeith has been lighted with gas from almost the first introduction of that illuminating power. The company, which was formed in 1827, had a severe struggle for some years with expensive works and small returns, but ultimately all difficulties were overcome, and the town is now well supplied with cheap and excellent gas. In the neighbourhood are the mansions and grounds of Newbattle, Melville, and Dalhousie, belonging to the Marquis of Lothian, Viscount Melville, and the Marquis of Dalhousie; whilst adjoining the town, and on the southern bank of the North Esk, stands Dalkeith House, the principal seat of His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch. This building occupies the site of an ancient castle, which was long in the possession of the family of Douglas, and afterwards the frequent residence of the Regent Morton during the minority of James VI., when it was commonly and significantly called "the lion's den." The present edifice, which was built by the family of Scott about the close of the seventeenth century, consists of a body and two wings, with ornaments of the Corinthian order in front, and may be termed rather a good and substantial than an elegant house. The park contains about 800 Scottish, or 1,000 English acres, surrounded by a stone wall, adorned with much fine wood, and beautified by the winding of the two rivers Esk. The hall, the grand staircase, and the several suites of apartments within are spacious, elegantly furnished, and enriched by a valuable collection of paintings. His late Majesty George VI., on his visit to Scotland, sojourned at this mansion; and her present Majesty, Queen Victoria, has likewise repeatedly honoured it with her presence. Dalkeith gives the title of Earl to the eldest son of the Duke of Buccleuch. Fairs are held annually on the first Thursday after Rutherglen (in May), for horses, &c., on the third Tuesday in October for cattle, &c., last Thursday in February, first Thursday in April, and second Thursday in October for hiring. Population of the parish, the acreage of which is 2,344, in 1881, 7,707, and in 1891, 7,704.

MILLERHILL is the principal village in the parish of Newton, and is a station on the North British Railway. Population in 1881, 335.

NEWBATTLE is a parish and small village beautifully situated about a mile to the south of Dalkeith. It is watered by the South Esk, and abounds in valuable coal, which was excavated for their own use in pre-Reformation times by its proprietors, the monks, and is now worked by the Lothian Coal Co., Limited. The site of the ancient Cistercian Abbey is occupied by the seat of the Marquis of Lothian, and it is surrounded by some of the oldest and largest trees in the kingdom, including a beech of extraordinary dimensions. The monastic buildings were ruthlessly removed when the present mansion was erected, and all that remains is part of the Gothic crypt, which was spared as it could be turned to account in the basement of the modern fabric. Some years ago the foundations of the old Abbey Church were accidentally discovered and laid bare, and are left so throughout their entire extent. The building, said to have been very elegant, consisted of a long nave with bays and side aisles, choir and central tower, almost identical in measurement with the Abbey of Jedburgh, which also belongs to Lord Lothian. Like Dalkeith House, Newbattle Abbey contains a great number of valuable paintings, both ancient and modern. The present parish church is a plain comfortable building, with stained-glass windows. The amiable and pious Robert Leighton, afterwards Bishop of Dunblane and Archbishop of Glasgow, was, when a Presbyterian, minister of Newbattle from 1641 to 1652, and the small pulpit he preached in has been in use by his successors from his time till the present day. A mural tablet has been erected in the church in memory of the good Archbishop. There is a well-attended parochial school, and at Newton Grange and Easthouses are handsome school premises, erected by the munificence of the Marquis of Lothian, in which the colliers' children of the district are instructed. Acreage, 5,225. Population in 1881, 8,346.

NEWTON is a parish of some considerable extent, contiguous to Dalkeith, having Lasswade and Liberton on the west and north, and Inveresk on the east. Coal is obtained abundantly within the parish, a large number of the inhabitants being employed in the mines. There is a handsome church belonging to the parish, and some useful schools; those for children of the colliers are well conducted, and have a beneficial tendency. Acreage 2,032. Population in 1881, 1,807, and in 1891, 1,180.

EDINBURGH.—See commencement of the Work.

GOREBRIDGE,

TEMPLE, HERIOT, BORTHWICK, FUSHEE BRIDGE, STOBBS MILL, AND CARRINGTON.

GOREBRIDGE is a populous village in the parish of Temple, about 10 miles S.E. from Edinburgh and 4 s. from Dalkeith. It is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British railway. Sixty years ago there were only a few houses here; now through the opening of extensive coalfields adjacent, and also the railway, it has become a place of importance. The places of worship in the village are the Free and a United Presbyterian church, Gorebridge is in the quod sacra parish of Stobbs, where a new church has been built at a cost of £2,200. The parish church is at the village of Temple, about three miles distant. The shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. The first works for the manufacture of gunpowder in Scotland were established here. Robert Dundas, Esq. of Arniston, founded a library for the use of the village and neighbourhood, and there is also a public hall belonging to the same gentleman. Population in 1881, 1,148.

TEMPLE parish, near the head of the South Esk, is bounded on the east by Borthwick, on the south by Heriot, on the west by Edleston and Penicuik, and on the north by Carrington. The village, which is about 10 miles S. from Edinburgh, is situated on rising ground on the banks of the Gladhouse water, which falls into the South Esk, a short way below. It has an old Gothic church (now in ruins), founded by King David I. for Templars; the new church (also Gothic) was built in 1830. The parish, which is chiefly of a hilly nature, and containing much moorish and pasture land, and an area of 19,479 acres, had in 1881 a population of 1,551.

HERIOT parish is ten miles in length, six in breadth, and situate 16 miles S.E. from the capital, and within the parish is a station on the Edinburgh and Hawick branch of the North British railway. The surface of the land in this district is generally uneven on the banks of the Gala and Heriot waters it is fertile. These two streams take their rise in the Muirfoot hills here, and afford fine sport to the angler. There are the remains of several ancient fortifications, most of them of a circular form, to be seen in the neighbourhood. The name of the parish imports the fine paid to the lord of the manor by a tenant. A fair is held at the head of Gala water on the first Friday after Whit Sunday for sheep and lambs. The parish encloses an area of 15,093 acres, with a population in 1881 of 429, and in 1891, 415.

BORTHWICK parish lies about twelve miles S.E. from Edinburgh, on the Carlisle road. Near the church, which is beautifully situated on an eminence, are the ruins of Borthwick Castle, erected in 1486 by Lord Borthwick. These interesting remains, which are only two miles west from Crichton, are eminently worthy of being visited by the tourist. The parish has been the birthplace of several highly distinguished men, among whom may be enumerated Principal Robertson and Dundas of Arniston. Acreage of the parish, 9,806. Population in 1881, 1,741.

FUSHIE BRIDGE is a neat village, in the parish of and about one mile from Borthwick and five S. from Dalkeith. At this village is a station on the line above mentioned. About a mile to the north is the village of STOBBS MILL, lying partly in Borthwick parish and partly in that of Temple.

CARRINGTON is a small parish, lying in the southern part of the county, on the descending braes, which, at their summit, divide the district from the wilds of Peebles-shire. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated land, 9½ miles S.E. from Edinburgh, and consists of but a few houses and the kirk. Though not unfavourable to the growth of corn, the soil is more particularly adapted to that of the potato and green crops, coal is wrought in abundance, and there is also an indication of ironstone. Prior to the Reformation this parish had the valuable peculiarity of being a rectory independent of any monastery. The parish embraces an area of 4,403 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 606, and in 1891, 563.

BONNYRIGG, COCKPEN, LIBERTON, GILMERTON, GREENEND, LOANHEAD, ROSLIN, AND ROSEWELL.

LASSWADE is a small neat village and parish, the former 6 miles s.w. of Edinburgh and 2 s.w. from Dalkeith, delightfully situated on both sides of the North Esk, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge. With its handsome modern church crowning the height on the north bank of the stream, and its modest rural cottages below, embosomed in luxuriant gardens and umbrageous trees, it may be esteemed one of the prettiest and most picturesque villages in Scotland. Sir Walter Scott spent the first years of his married life in a neat cottage a little apart from the village. John Clerk, of Eldin, author of a famous work on naval subjects, and Lord Eldin, resided in Lasswade; and Thomas de Quincey, the author of the "Life of an Opium Eater," and many other works, lived in a cottage near Polton for some years. Within the last thirty years this place has been greatly improved by the erection of many substantial dwellings, and the opening of several manufacturing establishments; among the latter are four paper mills. The mills, belonging to Messrs. Annandale & Son, Limited, are extensive works for making papers of various qualities. There are two other firms in Lasswade, and one in Polton engaged in the manufacture of paper. The North Esk runs through the whole length of the parish, and on its banks are presented a continuous succession of charming seats, in the most inviting situations, such as Melville Castle, Whitehill, Polton, to which Scott crossed to visit Constable, whom he called "the Napoleon of the printing trade," and Hawthornden—the latter remarkable for having belonged to Drummond, the poet and historian, and for the caves under it. These caves are three in number; the largest is twelve feet wide at the entrance, gradually tapering inwards; the height is six feet, and the length ninety; above there is a tunnel cut, for the admission of the light and air; in a recess there is a well, several fathoms deep. These caves are said to have afforded shelter to the Scots in turbulent times. At a little distance stand the ruins of Roslin Castle; and adjacent is Roslin chapel, one of the most entire and beautiful pieces of Gothic architecture now remaining in Scotland. There are also traces of two other religious foundations in the village, St. Ann's and St. Leonard's. In the cemetery of Lasswade church are interred the remains of Drummond, the poet before mentioned; and an aisle of the old structure is appropriated as a burial vault for the noble family of Melville, and here lie the remains of the first viscount of that title whose prominent situation, during the ministry of Mr. Pitt, will still be recollected. The parish, which embraces an area of 10,678 acres, in 1881 had a population of 8,872, and in 1891, 10,455.

ROSEWELL is a rising village in the parish Lasswade, situated about 4 miles s.w. from Dalkeith, and 2 s.w. from Bonnyrigg. A neat church of the establishment, a public school, and a commodious hall are situated in the village. The Peebles railway passes the village about half a mile distant, there being a junction at Hawthornden, for Penicuik district. In the neighbourhood there is an abundance of coal, and the manufacture of fire-clay goods and mineral oils is carried on to a considerable extent. Gorton House, overlooking the Esk, was a favourite residence of Christopher North. Population in 1881, 1,119, and in 1891, 1,074.

The parish of LIBERTON includes three villages of its name—UPPER (or OVER) LIBERTON, LIBERTON KIRK, and NETHER LIBERTON, with GILMERTON and GREENEND—all of great antiquity, but none of them now of extensive importance. The kirk town is about 3 miles s. from the capital, and the like distance n.w. from Dalkeith and Lasswade. Gilmerton, the most considerable village in the parish, is situated about midway between Edinburgh and Dalkeith. There are two free churches in the parish, and the original "Ragged" school, founded by the late Dr. Guthrie, has been removed to handsome and extensive premises near the parish church. There is a neat church or chapel of ease to Liberton in the village. The inhabitants are for the most part engaged in the adjacent collieries. Greenend village is about 4 miles n. from Lasswade, on the road to Edinburgh. The old church of Liberton, which was of Gothic architecture, survived till a recent date, when it was removed to make way for the present handsome semi-Gothic structure, whose square turrets and pinnacles can be seen at a great distance; an excellent manse is adjacent, and the village is contiguous. The parish, which lies at the base of the Pentland Hills, is exceedingly populous; and its mines of coal and its lime works are most extensive and valuable. The celebrated cave, dug by George Paterson, a blacksmith, out of the solid rock, was finished in 1734, after five years' toil. In this cave are several apartments with beds, a table with a large punch bowl, all formed from the same unaltered material; there are also a smith's forge, a well, and a washing house. Here Paterson lived several years, and here he died about 1787. Craigmillar Castle, sometime a favourite residence of Queen Mary, stands on rising ground of moderate elevation, and commands a beautiful and extensive prospect over the surrounding country. By the extension of Edinburgh towards the south a large number of handsome villas have been erected in this neighbourhood, and the Suburban railway, which encircles Edinburgh in its outskirts, has two stations in Liberton, and promises to add greatly to its population and manufactures. Large quarries of limestone are worked at Burdieshouse, and those of freestone and whinstone in various parts employ many persons. Liberton parish embraces an area of 6,617 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 6,026, and in 1891, 6,322.

BONNYRIGG is a large and rising village in the parish of COCKPEN, situated 6 miles s. from Edinburgh, and 2 s.w. from Dalkeith. There is a Free church, also two large and commodious schools, with an attendance of about 250 pupils in each. In the village is a Town Hall, capable of holding about six hundred persons, a bowling green, which is largely frequented by the inhabitants and others, and a large public park; and in the neighbourhood is Dalhousie Castle, the grounds of which include those of the famous "Laird of Cockpen," well known in Scottish song. There are two railway stations, viz.—Broomieknowe, on the Esk Valley Railway, and Bonnyrigg, on the Peebles Railway. Carpet weaving is carried on to a very considerable extent, many hands being employed in the manufacture of this very useful article; and in the immediate neighbourhood there are several coal mines. BROOMIEKNOWE, which is a part of the village, being in close proximity thereto, is resorted to by a large number of summer visitors. The Esk Valley, which is admired by all who visit it, can be seen from here to great advantage, and the view is open for miles around. Population in 1881, 2,164.

LOANHEAD is a large and rising village in the parish of Lasswade, one mile w. from that town, rather more than 2 s. from Liberton, and 5 s.e. from Edinburgh. It is now a distinct parish, and has an established church, and the Free, the Reformed Presbyterian, and the Roman Catholic bodies have each a place of worship. The village contains many respectable houses, and in the neighbourhood several families of distinction are resident. A considerable proportion of the population is employed in the oil works and collieries, and some in the neighbouring paper mills. The inhabitants have the advantage of being well supplied with water, which is conveyed to their houses by pipes. A station on the Roslin and Glenroese line is situated here. Population in 1881, 2,493; and in 1891, 3,244.

ROSLIN is a small village and parish, the latter separated from Lasswade some years ago, and erected into a distinct parish of itself. Besides the Established church, there is a handsome Free church. The village is reached by a cross road leading southward from the line betwixt Peebles and Edinburgh, distant from Edinburgh 7 miles s., from Lasswade 2½ s.w., and from Loanhead 2 miles in the same direction. It is much visited by tourists and parties from the metropolis, and, indeed, from all parts, both on account of the beauties of the scenery and of the ruins of Roslin Castle and its chapel. These stand south from the village, the former on the bank of the North Esk. The chapel is one of the most perfect specimens of Gothic architecture that time has spared in this part of the kingdom. These interesting relics, in connection with the loveliness of the district with which they are surrounded, form an attraction that invariably delights the visitor of cultivated taste and the admirer of the picturesque and beautiful. Agriculture is the prevailing occupation of the inhabitants of the parish; but there are the Roslin Gunpowder Mills and the extensive carpet works of Messrs. Henry Widdell & Co. Besides Roslin station on the branch line from Edinburgh to Glencorse, there are stations called Roslyn Castle and Roslin Lee on the other side of the valley. Omnibuses ply during the summer from Edinburgh, and the walk by the valley of the Esk to Hawthornden is exceedingly picturesque. Population of the village in 1881, 618, and in 1891, 730.

MUSSELBURGH,

WITH THE PARISH OF INVERESK, AND THE VILLAGES OF WEST PANS, LEVENHALL, WALLYFORD, INVERESK, DEANTOWN, COWPITS, FISHERROW, MONKTONHALL, OLD CRAIGHALL, NEW CRAIGHALL, AND BRUNSTANE.

MUSSELBURGH is a town of great antiquity, ranking amongst the oldest in Scotland; it is a burgh of regality, represented in Parliament and the Convention of Royal Burghs; and possesses common good of an estimated value of upwards of £40,000. It occupies a level expanse upon the south shore of the Firth of Forth, 6 miles E. from Edinburgh. The river Esk intersects the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts, that on its eastern bank being locally designated Musselburgh, and that on its western Fisherrow. The former name is derived from extensive mussel beds which extended along the beach; the latter from a row of fishermen's houses, formerly styled Fish Row. The site of Musselburgh is generally acknowledged to be that of an ancient sea level; hence the sub-soil is of sand and gravel. The situation is regarded as so favourable to health that a sanatorium was established here for the benefit of invalided soldiers during the wars with Napoleon I. Satisfied with the results, the Government desired to make the town a permanent military centre, and opened negotiations for the acquisition of a site whereon to erect cavalry barracks. The then authorities adopting a hostile attitude, the proposal was withdrawn, the Piershill site secured, and the entire military establishment here was abandoned.

As early as the first century, Musselburgh was a seat of population. When the Romans invaded Britain they established themselves in this locality, planting a colonia upon the rising ground at Inveresk. Where the church now stands an altar was erected to Apollo, the sun god, and their pretorium was in the adjacent grounds of Inveresk House. Towards the close of the last century an interesting discovery was made of the remains of a Roman villa, which afforded conclusive evidence that its occupant, the commander of this station, must have been an officer of high rank, affluent and noble, showing the importance of the post he held in the Imperial estimation. Doubtless he was one who sent his reports direct to, and received his orders direct from, the Eternal City. During the Roman occupation roads were made, bridges built, harbours constructed, order established, and around the protection this colony afforded, it is needless to say, peace-loving people gladly settled. Not till the seventh century, however, do we find authentic history from which to glean information. At that period Musselburgh obtains notice in the Saxon chronicles as Eskmuth of the Northumbrians, whose territory extended from the Humber to the Forth. It is worthy of remark that this name, given twelve centuries ago, has its exact equivalent to Inveresk, i. e., mouth of Esk, the present name of the parish. In earliest Scottish records mention is made of the two manors of Little Inveresk and Great Inveresk. Malcolm Canmore and his consort, Queen Margaret, whose chapel in Edinburgh Castle has been re-erected by command of Queen Victoria, and is the oldest building of which the Scottish metropolis can boast, gifted the manor of Little Inveresk to the monks of Dunfermline. Their son, David I., confirmed this, and gave in addition Greater Inveresk, which included the burgh and port of Musselburgh. From the baronial jurisdiction and extended powers then conferred upon the abbots of Dunfermline the burghal rights and privileges had beginning, and the community thus enjoying the then all powerful protection of the Church obtained a considerable degree of commercial prosperity. The importance the place had acquired before the end of the twelfth century is evident from the Scottish nobles having assembled here in 1201 to take the oath of fidelity to Alexander II., infant son of William the Lion. Until the Reformation it continued a burgh of regality, belonging to Dunfermline Abbey; Lord Chancellor Maitland, of Thirlstane, then became the Superior, and it still pays a small annual sum in name of feu duty to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose ancestress, Anne, Duchess of Monmouth, acquired rights thereto about the beginning of last century. The latest attempt to extort feudal homage from the magistrates, as representing the townspeople, was in 1702, at the instance of Sir Robert Dickson, of Smerton, and was successfully resisted upon the ground that the charters granted to the burgh freed them of any such acknowledgments. In 1330 the Earl of Murray, the Regent during the minority of Robert the Bruce's son, appointed Roger of Fawside, whose castle, now in ruins, stands on the border of the parish, Ambassador to the English Court. Two years later the Regent was taken ill at Musselburgh, and lodged in the best house which the town afforded. Situated at the east end of the south side of High street behind the present Episcopal chapel, it was then unenclosed; and during his illness the burgh-reeves maintained a regular guard upon the house to testify their respect for so illustrious a guest. This illness terminated fatally, but so deep an impression did the courtesy of the burgesses make upon the Earl of Mar, Randolph's cousin and successor in the Regency, that in 1340 he granted the town its first charter, applied to it the term "honest town"—a designation which it still retains, and has as its motto Honestas. After the disastrous battle of Pinkie, in 1547, this charter, with the whole of the burgh records, were ruthlessly destroyed by the Duke of Somerset; but in 1562 Robert Pitcairn, commendator of Dunfermline, executed another, affirming the ancient rights and privileges of the burgh. This charter is still extant, and has been ratified and confirmed by subsequent charters and Acts of Parliament, more particularly by one from John, Duke of Lauderdale, dated 1670, in which all former grants in favour of the burgh are acknowledged. In the year 1632 it was erected into a royal burgh by charter under the great seal, which excited the jealousy of the magistrates of Edinburgh, who contrived to obtain a reduction of the charter that year.

Musselburgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and seven councillors, elected according to the provisions of the Burgh Reform Act. The burgh unites with Leith, Newhaven and Portobello (usually called the Leith burghs) in returning one member to Parliament, the gentleman at present sitting being M. Ferguson, Esq. The magistrates are empowered to hold a court of record, and to grant endowments. Their jurisdiction extends two and a half miles along the shore, from the Magdalen bridge rivulet on the west to Ravenshough streamlet on the east, which at that locality is the boundary with Haddingtonshire; but the magistrates possess no jurisdiction over Inveresk village, which is included within the county. The town consists of two streets in the direction of nearly east and west; the main, or High street, extends from the bridge over the Esk on the west to the beautiful enclosures of Loretto and Pinkie on the east, and is on the great road from Edinburgh to Berwick and London. Parallel to the High street is the Mill hill, which leads from the Esk to the London road, at the entrance to the Links and Loretto grounds. A street known as Newbigging extends south from nearly the centre of the town opposite the cross, and leads directly to Inveresk, a quarter of a mile inland. The town contains a few minor streets and alleys. The only public edifice is the Town House, occupying an angle in the High street, a substantial and commodious edifice, including an Assembly room, council chamber, offices for the town clerk, town chamberlain, burgh surveyor, and constabulary quarters. Attached to the building is a clock tower with slated spire of quaint Flemish design. The clock was a gift to the town from the Dutch States in 1496, a century and a half before the pendulum was invented, and its working parts are still in such wonderful preservation that it may not improbably remain in serviceable condition for centuries to come. At that time a considerable import and export trade was carried on, and so cordial were the relationships thus formed that this enduring testimony to the friendship of the Dutch was sent here. In front of the municipal offices is the town cross, a square pedestal, within which is a disguised draw well, surmounted by a stone pillar carrying a unicorn bearing a shield with the town's arms, three muscels and three anchors, arranged alternately. Connected with the Town House is the gaol, now used, since the passing of the Prison Act, as a temporary place of confinement for petty offenders. This prison is said to have been erected about 1590, from the materials of the ruinous chapel of Loretto. At the east end of Musselburgh, near the Links, are the scattered buildings and fields which appertain to the now well-known school of Loretto. The school house occupies the site of a monastery which was originally an offshoot from the castle of Our Lady of Loretto in Italy, and became a minor monastery of Dunfermline during the twelfth century. In the middle of the sixteenth century a pretended miracle, wrought by the monks, was exposed by Colville, a Kinross-shire laird. The populace, hating the monks, and being enraged at the deception, reduced the buildings to ruins and dispersed their inmates, for which the town used to be annually cursed by the Pope. After this the property fell into the hands of the Lauderdale family, whose monogram may still be seen over the door of an old vault, and it was afterwards bought by the celebrated Lord Clive, who erected a considerable part of the present building. In 1829 it was converted into a preparatory school by the late Rev. Dr. Langhorne, but gradually changed its type, and about thirteen years since it took rank as a public school, being especially noted for its proficiency in athletic games and choral singing. Its choir is probably the most powerful in Scotland, and can now be heard to advantage in the beautiful new chapel which has recently been presented to the school by boys past and present.

The extensive common, known as Musselburgh Links, has long been in deserved repute as a golfing ground, and in its immediate proximity the Royal Musselburgh Golf Club, the Honourable Company of Edinburgh Golfers, the Edinburgh Burgess Golf Society and the Brunsfield Golf Club have erected handsome and commodious club houses. Once a year the Royal Company of Archers resort thither to compete for the massive Musselburgh silver arrow—one of its most valued trophies. This competition was first instituted in the sixteenth century, and is considered to date back to a time when proficiency in the use of the bow was regarded as of great national importance as excellence in rifle shooting is now. This arrow has a vast number of gold and silver medals, which have been attached by its respective winners, and is annually returned to the town that it may again be offered for competition. When the friendly contest upon the Links has decided who is victor, the archers entertain the magistrates to dinner, and they in return present a riddle of claret, in accordance with an ancient custom. The Edinburgh race meeting is held here annually, and the races of the Royal Caledonian Hunt are held at intervals of three years. Cromwell quartered his infantry on Musselburgh Links in 1650, before the battle of Dunbar, his own tent having been placed upon an elevated part nearly opposite Linkfield House. He took up residence in Inveresk House for a short time, and the apartment is still shown which was used as orderly room, and in which some courts-martial are said to have been held. His cavalry were quartered at Inveresk, their horses stabled in the church, and his cannon planted upon the battery mound in the churchyard which had been east up by Somerset in the reign of Edward VI. Skirting Musselburgh Links on the south are the fine villas of Linkfield, Woodside, Linkfield House and Victoria and Albert terraces; and at the eastern extremity the attractive suburb of Levenbank, including Buccleuch Park, Hope Place and West Pans—a seaside resort which is yearly becoming more and more popular.

The streets of the town are of greater width than in most old country burghs, and are well paved with whinstone blocks. The drainage system has been efficiently carried out, and the water supply, derived from the Moorfoots, is ample and excellent. The town is lighted with gas by a company established in 1831, whose works are at the north-west corner of the Links near the river mouth. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland Limited, are in operation here. There are several literary, benevolent and religious societies; golf, bowling, cycling, tennis, cricket and football clubs; there is also a battery of the Mid-Lothian Coast Artillery Volunteers and a company of the 6th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots, Lothian Regiment. Life in Musselburgh 60 years since has been delightfully described by Delta in the pages of "Mansie Wamphray" while Mrs. Oliphant, in "Aberdeen," no less successfully deals with incidents at Wallyford; and it is well known that some of the characters introduced by Sir Walter Scott in "The Antiquary" were picked up when he was quartered here with the Edinburgh Light Horse Volunteers. The Esk is crossed by six bridges; one of wood upon iron pillars and beams, at the lower ford; another of iron at the middle ford, for foot passengers only; the new stone bridge of five elliptical arches, designed by Rennie, the famous engineer, whose portrait is hung in the council chamber; the old stone bridge, up to the beginning of this century the chief artery of communication between Edinburgh, Berwick and London, now disused for vehicular traffic; the iron girder railway bridge on the North British railway. Musselburgh branch; the stone railway bridge carrying the N.B.R. main line to London; and the Cowpits wood bridge for foot passengers, near Dalkeith policies. The old bridge, a venerable structure of three arches, erroneously supposed to be of Roman origin, was built by Lady Jane Hepburn, wife of the then Lord Seton, an ancestress of the Earls of Winton, and grand-aunt of the notorious Earl of Bothwell, associated with the history of the unhappy Queen Mary. Upon the top of one of the buttresses may still be seen the iron fastenings to which the gateway for its defence was attached. The roadway is high and narrow, and is now approached by a flight of steps at either end. Across it the Scottish army passed after the battle of Pinkie, when Lord Graham, eldest son of the Earl of Montrose, and others were killed on it by cannon shot from the English fleet anchored at the river mouth; and across it Queen Mary, Prince Charles Stuart and many more of noble and royal rank must have passed. Nor has the burgh been without royal visits during the present reign. Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Connaught have at different times honoured it with their presence, and the Princes have enjoyed playing golf upon its links. Adjoining the old stone bridge is the commodious terminal station of the Musselburgh branch of the North British railway, with every suitable accommodation for the extensive, sometimes exceptionally heavy, traffic to be dealt with. The approach to High street from the station is through a fine avenue of trees called the Mall. Near the station and connected to it by a private railway, are the Patent Fishing Net Works of Messrs. Stuart, and the mills of the Inveresk Paper Company. Upon the death of Mr. James Paterson, the inventor of an ingeniously constructed loom capable of producing fishing nets equal to those made by hand, Messrs. Stuart acquired his factory and patent rights. With such energy and success did they conduct the concern that it was soon found necessary to erect the present large and handsome works. The buildings, detached for security in case of fire, occupy four sides of a parallelogram the shorter ends being occupied by the cotton mill and the warehouses. The whole are tastefully designed. The cotton mill has four colossal symbolic statues, executed in freestone, by Ritchie, an eminent local sculptor, and the office is so placed as to command an outlook upon all parts of the establishment. The centre area is pleasantly treated as an ornamental garden with fountain and shrubbery. Within the works the entire processes are carried on to convert raw hemp and cotton into twine and finished nets. The product is sent out ready for use at every important fishing station in the world, from Anstruther to the Antipodes; from the pickard fisheries of Cornwall to the salmon reaches of Columbia. All the patent machinery used in the manufacture is made by the firm, who keep a regular staff of foundrymen and mechanics for this purpose. Connected with the mills are villa residences for the managers and heads of departments, and commodious cottage dwellings for a number of the workpeople. In addition to these works the firm have another large factory at Buckhaven, Fife, similarly employed. Adjoining this establishment are the very extensive paper mills of the Inveresk Paper Company, which give employment to a large number of hands, and turn out enormous quantities of high-class writing, printing and enamelled papers. The chimney of these mills is 250 feet in height and carries off all offensive and chemical vapours arising in the manufacture. The public pathway alongside the works is maintained in admirable condition by the company, who have also with praiseworthy liberality considerably embellished the river bank by judicious tree planting. Besides these industries, two large breweries, malting barley, seed crushing, tanning and currying leather, the manufacture of confectionery, pottery-ware, salt, skin mats, brick and tile making and boat building are carried on.

The places of worship in Inveresk parish, including Musselburgh, Fisherrow, and New Craig Hall, &c., are detailed in a list appended to the Directory of the town. The parish church occupies the summit of the hill of Inveresk, and is a large square edifice without any architectural pretensions. It is a conspicuous object in all directions, and its lofty and elegant spire is a landmark in the navigation of the Firth of Forth. Here has been in all probability a place of worship since the first century, where the Roman legionaries worshipped the sun god, and indulged in Bacchanalian revelry; the rites of beatismism gave place to the worship of the Most High. In the middle ages the church of St. Michael, of Norman-Gothic style, occupied this site, and from pre-Reformation times up to the present century was the parish church of Inveresk—the church of Williamson, of Coult, of Blackadder and Carlyle-Carlyle, the friend and companion of Home and Douglas, of Grange and Drummore, the scholar, the wit, the gentleman, Carlyle, the illustrious Jupiter, whose remains rest beneath the shadow of the present church which he laboured earnestly and well to have erected. In the churchyard are the remains of many naval and military heroes, and here also is the grave of David Macbeth Moir, the celebrated poet "Delta," to whose memory a handsome monument is erected at the top of High street. Musselburgh has long been distinguished for its schools—among which the most conspicuous is the Burgh Grammar School; there is an English burgh school in Musselburgh, and another in Fisherrow; these schools are now under the control of the School Board. In 1878 the rateable value of Musselburgh was £23,000, which had increased to £29,000 in 1888. The population of the burgh in 1881 was 7,866, and in 1891, 11,506.

FISHERROW, consisting of four parallel streets, is connected with Musselburgh by the bridges previously noticed, and both are municipally, politically, and locally one town or burgh, under the sole jurisdiction of the provost, magistrates, and town council of Musselburgh. The small harbour is at the west end of Fisherrow, and is under the control of commissioners. A large sum has been expended in erecting and improving the piers, but the harbour is tidal, the access shallow, and can never admit vessels of any considerable tonnage. The custom house, connected with that of Leith, is near the harbour. A portion of the inhabitants of Fisherrow are fishermen, and the produce of their industry is conveyed by rail to Edinburgh and disposed of by their wives and daughters. As a class these fisher folks are hardy, industrious, frugal and well behaved. North Esk Lodge and Newfield (connected with the Loretto school), the villas of Eskbank, Raigaitkei, Spring Cottage, Spring Gardens, Springbank, Mollendo House, Campie House, Olive Bank, Stoneybank, and St. Meyhill are in this part of the town. Contiguous to Fisherrow Links are the public slaughter houses, constructed upon the most approved plan and with every modern appliance carefully introduced. The village of Inveresk is so pleasant that it has often been designated the Montpelier of Scotland. It consists chiefly of elegant and substantial mansions and villas, with beautiful grounds surrounding them.

DEANTOWN AND COWPITS are colliery villages further south. Pinkie House is delightfully situated in extensive policies, with fine old trees, and is admittedly one of the best specimens of an old Scottish manor house in the county. Long the country residence of the Abbots of Dunfermline, it has many historical associations connected with it; and its turretted tower and much admired Gothic fountain are, perhaps, the portions of greatest antiquity and interest. The battle-field of Pinkie is situate about a mile south of Pinkie House, and overlooking it a mile and a half further off is Carberry hill, celebrated for the surrender of Queen Mary to the confederated nobility in 1567, and where she finally parted with Bothwell. Near is the fine mansion of Carberry Tower. Numerous villas adorn the vicinity of Musselburgh. New Hailes, a fine mansion, half a mile south-west from Fisherrow, was the seat of Sir David Dalrymple, Bart., Lord Hailes, distinguished as the great restorer of Scottish history and antiquities. He died in this mansion, in which his valuable library is carefully preserved. This house is now occupied by, and is the property of, Sir Charles Dalrymple, Bart., M.P. In this parish are found limestone, freestone, and coal, the latter partiicularly in abundance. From the higher grounds to the south most extensive views are to be obtained, reaching from Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi and Ben Vorlich, or the west to the German Ocean, and from the Grampians, Ochils, and Lomonds to the Pentlands, Moorfoots, the Lammermuirs, the Firth of Forth, and Fife coast, forming the foreground of the panorama. The entire parish of Inveresk embraces an area of 5,155 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 10,537, and in 1891, 11,503.

MONKTON HALL, is a small village in the parish of Inveresk.

NEW CRAIG HALL, or NIDDRIE, is a mining village, a mile west from Fisherrow. The colliery works of the Niddrie and Benhar Coal Company are a short distance further.

BRUNSTANE, or Brunstane Mills, is a hamlet in the parish of Inveresk, about a mile from Musselburgh.

PATH-HEAD,

CRANSTON, EDGE-HEAD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PATH-HEAD, or Path-head Ford, is a considerable village in the parish of Crichton, 11 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 5 s. from Dalkeith, and 8 N.W. from Fala, situated on both sides of the Lauder, the great south country and London road passing through it. The village is about two miles from that of Crichton (described along with Heriot, which see). The principal street is broad and straight, and the houses, which are mostly of one story, are well built. There is a Board school in the village. The surrounding country abounds in beautiful scenery, and several seats of the gentry contribute to ornament the district. Population of the village in 1881, 583.

The parish of Cranston, or Cranston, is intersected by the river Tyne, having Dalkeith and Newbattle on the north and west, and Crichton on the south, extending 5 miles in length by 3 in breadth, but very narrow in the middle. The land is high and undulating.

but is well cultivated and enclosed, and embellished with numerous and delightful plantations. A handsome church, of white freestone, in the Gothic style of architecture, is situated on the road to Dalkeith, and in the parish are two Board schools. Within the parish is Oxenford Castle and Preston Hall—the former the seat of the Earl of Stair. The parish comprises the colliery village of EDGE-HEAD, and COCSLAND and PRESTON, two other villages, but they contain nothing worthy of note. Acreage, 5,100. In 1831 Cranston had a population of 998, and in 1891, 863.

PENICUIK,

GLENCORSE, AUCHENDINNY, GREENLAW, AND MILTON BRIDGE.

PENICUIK is a parish in the county of Mid-Lothian, and on the borders of Peebles-shire. The parish extends from eleven to twelve miles in length, and six in breadth, and is watered by the North Esk, which runs its whole extent. The name Penicuik is of Celtic etymology, and signifies "the hill of the Cuckoo." Along its northern border, the parish includes a considerable part of the Pentland Hills, on which are pastured numerous flocks of sheep. The southern portion is more level, and the soil is various, but for some years past dairy farming has been engaged in to a considerable extent on several of the farms. The principal industry is the manufacture of paper, which is carried on with great enterprise at Valleyfield Mills by Messrs. A. Cowan & Sons, Limited, and at Esk Mills by Messrs. J. Brown & Co., Limited. The mills of Valleyfield are the largest in this part of the country, and there both printing and writing papers are manufactured, thus furnishing employment for a large number of hands. In the beginning of this century these mills had been acquired by Government for the reception of 5,000 French prisoners of war. During the years the prisoners were located at Valleyfield, some 300 died and were buried in the grounds, and to their memory a handsome monument was, in 1860, erected near the spot by "certain inhabitants." The other mill in the parish, known as the Esk mills, was the first cotton mill in Scotland, and was afterwards used as cotton and paper mills, but is now entirely devoted to the latter trade. Penicuik House is an elegant edifice, built about 1761, by Sir James Clerk, and is now the residence of Sir George Clerk, Bart. There is a good collection of paintings in it, and Ossian's Hall, the work of Runciman, is much admired. Sir James also collected a considerable number of Roman antiquities. To the south of the house is an obelisk erected to the memory of Allan Ramsay, the poet, who frequently resided here. In this parish there is also the fine old mansion of New Hall, in the grounds of which is situated what is generally supposed to be the scene of Allan Ramsay's fine pastoral "The Gentle Shepherd;" and there

"Habbies How" is pointed out. Another romantic glen in the adjoining parish of Glencorse has also been claimed as the original "Habbies How." There is abundance of coal and limestone, the latter occasionally so hard as to admit of a fine polish, and in which many petrifications are found. Whinstone and freestone are also plentiful, and in Carlepe Hill have been discovered specimens of lead and iron ore. Ironstone mining has in recent years become an important industry, both in this parish and that of Glencorse. There are several chalybeate and petrifying springs in this quarter, and on the banks of the North Esk, near Spittal Hill, there is a well, the waters of which have a bitter taste, and are drunk by the country people for bowel complaints. The ruins of some old castles and the vestiges of encampments are pointed out in this district. While there are several small hamlets in the parish of Penicuik, the only populous place is the thriving town, which includes the police burgh of Penicuik and the contiguous villages of KIRKILL, FIELDSEND, and SHOTTOWN. The town is well built, being seated on high land, overhanging the north bank of the North Esk river, on the road from Edinburgh to Peebles, about 9 miles s.w. from the former, 13 n. from the latter, and 9 s.s.w. from Dalkeith. The parish of Penicuik encloses an area of 18,880 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 5,309, and in 1891, 4,914, and the burgh 4,206.

GLENCORSE, or Glencross, is a small parish in the county of Mid-Lothian, containing about three square miles, and at a distance of 6 miles s. from Edinburgh. The road to Dunfermline, Biggar, Moffat, Peebles, and Penicuik passes through it. In the vale of Glencorse, on the north side of the Esk, are the ruins of a chapel, dedicated to Saint Catherine. The church is built on an eminence surrounded by trees. GLENCORSE has been formed into the 1st Regimental district and depot of the Royal Scots. MILTON BRIDGE is a small hamlet in this parish. Acreage of the parish, 4,257. Population in 1,881, 1,500, and in 1891, 1,451.

AUCHENDINNY is a village in the parish of Glencorse, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from Edinburgh, on the road to Peebles, situated in a romantic dell, through which flows the North Esk. This place has been long known for the manufacture of paper, and it has been said that one of the first mills established in Scotland was erected in this locality, and there is one now in operation contiguous to the village. Paper making was introduced into North Britain about one hundred and seventy years ago; previously all stationery articles were imported regularly from Holland.

PORTOBELLO,

DUDDINGSTON, JOPPA, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PORTOBELLO, a parliamentary burgh and fashionable watering place, is situated on a plain on the south side of the Frith of Forth, and in the parish of Duddingston, with a small part in the parish of South Leith. It is 3 miles E. from Edinburgh by the turnpike road. The North British railway to Berwick and Carlisle possesses a station near the centre of the town and another at Joppa, thus giving ready access to all parts of the kingdom. Few towns have risen more rapidly in importance. Little over a century ago the ground which it occupies was an unproductive waste along the shore, overspread with whins and bent, affording ready shelter to the smuggler and to lawless characters from the metropolis. There was then only one thatched hut of two apartments, "a but and a ben," which stood until the year 1862, when it was pulled down to make room for the Town Hall, which is built on the site. The fanciful idea is quite common and generally accepted, that this hut was built by a sailor who had served under Admiral Vernon at the storming of Puerto Bello, in the Isthmus of Panama, in the year 1739, and who had misanthropically secluded himself in what must then have been a drear region. For a long time it was, with the exception of one or two shepherds' shealings, the only habitation in the locality, and was used as a humble hostelry or half-way house for travellers taking the shore road from Musselburgh to Edinburgh.
From the fact that when the present high road, passing through Jock's Lodge, was formed, the fishermen from the former town, who were then in the habit of carrying their fish to market in the city in creels or baskets on their backs, refused to use the new road, but trudged on in their old path, it came to be known as the "Fishwives' Causeway." A fragment only of this "causeway," which some suppose to be Roman, but which is more likely to be one of the roads constructed from the city in Queen Mary's time, still exists; railway and other modern improvements having made rad havoc of such works of antiquity. Few, if any, houses were erected in the neighbourhood of the hut for at least a quarter of a century. In 1765 Willi m Jamieson, sometimes called the "father of Portobello," discovered a valuable bed of clay, which long ages had laid down in the estuary of the Figget burn. His father (Patrick Jamieson) was a celebrated builder of his day in Edinburgh. The extension and improvement of the city, which had begun about that time by the building of the North Bridge and the New Town, was largely undertaken by him, and building material for interior walls being much in demand, the son established a brick and tile works, a pottery, and afterwards a harbour at the mouth of the burn. It is worthy of note that the elder Jamieson was the builder of the Royal Exchange of Edinburgh in 1763, while the son restored the

Trou church, the steeple of which being of wood, was afterwards destroyed by fire in 1824. He was also contractor for making the public drains of the city, at an outlay of no less than £100,000, the rubbish from the excavations of which was chiefly carried to Portbello to fill up the holes made in course of the manufacture of bricks, tiles, &c. These works naturally led to the building of workmen's houses, and the village so formed came to be known as the village of Figget, and more frequently, perhaps, Brickfield, under which name
we find it designated in Arnot's "History of Edinburgh."

During the latter part of the century, however, attracted no doubt by the beautiful level beach, and the bracing air of the locality, some of the citizens of Edinburgh began to erect summer residences amid the whins and green parks eastward of the brickworks.
Among the first of these to be built was Mr. Jamieson's house, about 1782, which still stands in Adelphi place, though very much altered in appearance. Long afterwards it was converted into a school, and was for some time occupied as the burgh police and council chambers. The Tower, Shrubmount, afterwards the residence and the house in which Hugh Miller died; Ramsay Lodge, Park House, and other country residences, were scattered over the ground; but until well on into the present century these detached houses must have been few and far between, for in "Scotland Delineated," a work written in 1799, we find "Portobello" described as "a rising village of about 300 inhabitants, employed in the manufacture of bricks, tiles, jars, brown pottery, and white stoneware;" but no reference made to it as a watering place. In 1809 a chapel of ease, connected with and subordinate to the Kirk Session of Duddingston, was built, of which the Rev. John Glen continued to be the minister until the disruption of 1843.

Within the last eighty years the town has increased very much in size and importance. It consists of a main street, the High street, which forms a part of the highway from Edinburgh to London.
Including Joppa, which is now practically a part of the town, the length of this street is a mile and a quarter. The streets branching off right and left, the terraces, squares, &c. of handsome houses and villas are all well built. The majority of these houses have gardens in front, which give the town a light and airy appearance. It was erected into a burgh in 1893, and is governed by a provost, two baillies, a treasurer, and five councillors. Conjointly with Leith and Musselburgh, it returns a member to Parliament, the present representative being R. C. Munro-Ferguson, Esq., who was returned August 26th, 1886, and again in 1892. There are a police, cleaning and lighting establishment, and a fire brigade. Water of excellent quality is supplied in abundance at high pressure, and the houses and streets are lighted with gas. The magistrates and council have expended a large sum of money on the drainage of the town, which is thorough and complete. They also constructed a broad marine promenade, a mile in length along the sea beach, in the middle of which stands the Prince of Wales Fountain, a very handsome ornamental drinking fountain. There is also an elegant pier, 1,250 feet long, with seats capable of accommodating 2,000 persons, and a spacious saloon with pavilion above for the use of visitors, in which high class concerts are held twice daily during the summer months. The beach is a noble expanse of pure smooth sand, affording at all times the greatest facility and safety to bathers, and there is also a commodious suite of warm salt water baths. The residential accommodation is ample, and comprises several hotels, houses of various sizes and degrees of elegance, and large villas suitable for first-class families.

The places of worship are in connection with the Church of Scotland, the Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Congregational, and Roman Catholic; commodious and handsome Board schools have been erected, and there are also several private schools. There are three banks—branches respectively of the Royal, the National and the Clydesdale Banking Companies. A considerable trade is done in the manufacture of paper, bottles, pottery, earthenware, bricks, and tiles; and at Joppa there are salt works. The scenery is varied and extensive—on one side the noble estuary of the Forth, with the island of Inchkeith, the hills of Fife and Kinross, the fertile lands of East Lothian, Troilainlaw, North Berwick Law, and in the distance the Bass Rock, while the coast is studded with numerous picturesque towns and villages; and on the other side are Arthur's Seat, Craigmillar Castle, and the Pentland Hills. The air is pure and invigorating, and the locality very healthy. These immediate local advantages, together with its proximity to the metropolis, with which there is constant communication by railway and tramway, and the easy access to all parts of the kingdom, combine to render Portobello a most desirable place either for permanent residence or temporary retirement. In 1881 Portobello (including Joppa) had a population of 6,926, and in 1891, 8,161.

DUNNINGSTON parish is bounded by the parish of Canongate, a part of the metropolis, on the west; South Leith on the north, the sea and part of Inveresk on the east, and Liberton on the south. The parish derives its name from the settlement here of one Dodine, during the reigns of David I. and Malcolm IV., at which time the superiority of the barony of Dodineston, with the church, was gifted to Kelso Abbey, founded by David I. in 1128. It remained in the possession of the abbey till the Reformation, when the barony came into the possession of a family of the name of Thomson, the last of whom was made a baronet by Charles I. in 1636. There are frequent references in the charter of Kelso to Dodineston and its founder; among the earliest being one in a charter granted in the reign of Malcolm IV., making a grant of the church of Swinton to the abbey, in which "Dodine de Dodineston" appears as a witness. Dodine also granted to the first abbot, Herbert, the church of Linton Ruderick. In charters of later date the son of Dodine is a witness to several, particularly one by William de Vetere Ponte to the canons of Holyrood, where he signs himself Hugo, Filius Dodini de Dodineston. Richard, the son of Hugo, and grandson of Dodine, at a subsequent period—between 1221 and 1240—renounced any claim he or his predecessors had upon the lauds. They then passed into possession, "in feu ferm," of a family of the name of De Boscho. The barony of Dunningston became the property of the notorious Duke of Lauderdale in 1674, from whom it passed with a daughter of his second wife, as pin money, to her husband, the first Duke of Argyll. In 1745 it was sold by his successor to James, Earl of Abercorn, whose successor, the Duke of Abercorn, still holds a large portion of it. From a very early period it seems that there have been two villages, called Easter and Wester Dunningston, both of which, though considerably reduced in population and house accommodation, are otherwise much improved in appearance. The mining and weaving populations which about a century ago occupied them have entirely disappeared, in consequence of these two industries having ceased to exist in the parish. A better class of houses and villas has taken their place. Wester Dunningston is charmingly situated near the base of Arthur's Seat, and at the east end of the loch which bears its name. Round Arthur's seat is a noble drive, known as the Queen's Drive. The church, which is Norman, and of very great antiquity, occupies a small eminence rising from the verge of the water. Though modernised externally, its interior ornaments and arches appear to be as old as the days of Dodine, and from documentary and other evidence, it seems to be undoubted that it was built in the first part of the twelfth century. Dunningston Loch is a beautiful sheet of water, about a third of a mile in length, and not more than half a mile from the southern outskirts of Edinburgh. There is an excellent road between Dunningston and Portobello. The parish encloses an area of 1,731 acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 7,830.

JOPPA, before mentioned, intimately connected with and now a part of the burgh of Portobello, is of modern growth. Its salt works and quarries have been wrought for many years, but the latter are now worked out. Coal at one time was found in great abundance; but in consequence of the flooding of the pits, which stood near the sea, in 1790, the works have been entirely abandoned. From its proximity to the beach and rocks, Joppa is a favourite resort of summer visitors. There are numbers of neat villas built near the road, nearly all of which are laid out for their accommodation.

RATHO,

KIRKLISTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RATHO is a small village, situated about 8 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, nearly in the centre of its parish, and contiguous to the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway and the Union canal, by which communication it has ready access to the capital and intermediate district. The parish, which is about four miles long and three broad, and abounds in whinstone, comprises an area of 8,147 acres; it lies in the middle between the Pentland Hills and the Frith of Forth. The east part is flat and fertile, but the ground rises gradually towards the west. Dalmahoy, the principal residence of the Earl of Morton, and Hatton, formerly belonging to the family of Lauderdale, both beautiful and elegant seats, are in this parish. Hatton House—where tradition asserts Queen Mary slept a night—is one of the oldest and most substantially built houses in Scotland, the walls being so thick as to contain a hiding room which there is little doubt was used in troublous times. These seats with the plantations of Addison give a rich and pleasant aspect to the country. Agriculture is carried on with spirit and success. The parish church is an irregular building, having been originally erected in the 12th century. It was restored in the 17th and again in the earlier part of this century, and portions of all three erections being now in use, it is altogether an interesting structure. The public school is spacious and well attended. There is also an Episcopal church on the Dalmahoy estate, and a Roman Catholic church has been erected in the parish. The population in 1881 was 1,815; and in 1891, 1,889; of this number the village had 821.

KIRKLISTON is partly in Midlothian, but chiefly in Linlithgowshire; the village is 8 miles w. from Edinburgh, situated on the left bank of the Almond, on the road to Falkirk. This place was anciently called Temple-liston, from the circumstance of the Knights-Templars having formerly an establishment here. The village is well built, but of limited trade; distilling and grinding corn are the principal branches. The church is neat, and its situation remarkably pleasant. The surface of the country is agreeably varied by rising ground—is rich, well cultivated, and produces excellent crops. Here Lord Stair first introduced the culture of cabbage in the open fields. Within a field on the east side of the Almond stands a remarkable monument of antiquity, called the Castane, erected at a period too remote for conjecture. It stands four feet and a half above the ground, and is about eleven feet and a half in circumference; its surface bears a dilapidated inscription, which has puzzled the skill of antiquarians to decipher. About a mile from Kirkliston is Newliston House, principally erected and finished by John Earl of Stair, and now the elegant seat of Thomas Alexander Hog, Esq., J.P. The house is handsome and modern, the plantations extensive and tastefully disposed. Area of the parish, 9,505 acres; population in 1881, 2,580, and in 1891, 3,734.

STOW,

CAITHA AND FOUNTAINHALL.

STOW, an extensive parish in the southern extremity of the county, is nearly sixteen miles long and eight broad, and partly in Selkirkshire. At the village of Stow, which is 24 miles S.E. distant from Edinburgh, is a station on the North British railway (Waverley route) and three churches, belonging respectively to the Establishment, the Free Church, and the United Presbyterians. There are three woollen manufactories here. In the village is a very handsome town hall, part of which is devoted to a literary institute and library, and a public room for lectures. The village is well lighted with gas, supplied by a public company. An augmented water supply is being provided from Sell Moor Hill, at a cost of over £1,000, the villages of Stow and Killochryett having been constituted a special district alike for water supply and drainage. Hirings for servants are held on Friday before the last Monday in February and the second Tuesday in March. The first days are Wednesday before the first Sunday of May and the second Sunday of November. Acreage 86,843. Population in 1881, 2,395, and in 1891, 1,811.

ELGINSHIRE,

SO designated from the name of its capital, ELGIN, and sometimes MORAYSHIRE, from being the central division of the "Province of Moray," is one of the northern counties of Scotland; bounded on the north by that branch of the North Sea called the Moray Firth, on the east and south-east by Banffshire; on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description. Thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of a triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprise 475 square miles, or 804,606 acres of land, and extends from north to south forty miles, and from east to west twenty miles. In point of size Elgin ranks as the eighteenth and in population as the nineteenth amongst Scottish counties. For many years past agricultural improvements have been made with rapid strides, and the greater portion of the waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beaully on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south-west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the Bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardino, the estates of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the "dun" of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as "cairns," monumental pillars, &c., &c. The "Province of Moray," anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Firth. So late as the time of Charles I. the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant, and, as Monrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Innerlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

SOIL, SURFACE, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—The soil of this country, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured in a straight line from the hills to the shore; this plain, however, is diversified over its whole extent by ridges of lower hills in general nearly parallel to the shore beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the river Spey, Lossie and Findhorn, with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district the country may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed "the Brae of Moray;" and is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. Agriculture is pursued in a spirited manner, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county the Duke of Fife and other proprietors formed plantations to so great an extent that almost every part of the land inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. Except sandstone, limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The south of this county produces principally oats, but in the north is unsurpassed for the quantity and quality of the crops of turnips, potatoes, barley, and wheat. To the breeding and rearing of cattle much attention is devoted, the polled Aberdeen breed and the pure shorthorn being the breeds most highly prized. Little can be said respecting manufactures; woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood and whiskey, comprehend the principal exports, the chief imports being coal, iron, timber, and manures. There are also ship and boat building yards, breweries, tanneries, &c. Herring fishing is prosecuted at several villages on the coast, and fine salmon fishing at the mouths of the Spey and Findhorn, and all along the sea coasts. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate; the harder kinds of fruit, all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum, by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; whilst flowers and fruit of the more rare species are brought to perfection in the gardens and orchards of this county. With respect to the winds, the most prevalent gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels inasmuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that in the lower parts of the Moray the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district in Scotland; in the higher quarter the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the Spey, the Findhorn, and the Lossie, all flowing in a northerly direction and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which Loch Spynie is most deserving of notice; it is three miles in length, and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground. In accordance with this apperance, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea shells (particularly those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aquatic tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike. The RAILWAYS in this county are the Great North of Scotland and the Highland lines, which have stations at Elgin and other towns.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes and six parts of parishes; it contains two royal burghs—ELGIN and FORBES; the former unites with Cullen, Banff, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead in returning one member to Parliament and the county at large, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputed another member. The present representative is J. Seymour Keay, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 was 4,991. The lord lieutenant is the Duke of Fife, K.T. By the census returns for 1881 the county contained a population of 43,788, and by those for 1891, 43,448, showing a decrease during the ten years of 340. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was, exclusive of railways, £160,775, and of railways, £25,277; total, £186,052.

BURGHEAD,

DUFFUS, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, NEW DUFFUS, ROSEISLE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BURGHEAD is a fishing village, situated on a bold head and jutting out into the Moray Frith, in the parish of Duffus, 9 miles W. from Elgin, and about 10 N.E. from Forres. It possesses a fine pier, and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam or other vessels may enter with perfect safety. This was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station; the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible also a well dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. There is also a chemical works, at which there are a number of people employed. The vessels belonging to this place land goods here for the surrounding country. There is a station here, on a branch connecting the main line at Alves, which in 1892 was extended to Hopeman. In the parish is an Established church, together with a chapel of ease at Burghead, where there are also a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a public school. Population in 1881, 1,428, and in 1891, 1,671.

DUFFUS parish extends along the shore of the Moray Frith to the north of Elgin, from which the church is about 5 miles distant. Hopeman railway station is two miles from the village. The parish is about 6 miles in length, by about 3 in breadth, and contains 9,475 acres. The villages of ROSEISLE, HOPEMAN, CUMMINGSTON, and NEW DUFFUS are all within the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 3,985, and in 1891, 4,293.

CUMMINGSTON is a small village, situated on the road midway between Burghead and Hopeman, and almost without any trade. There is a station here on the Burghead and Hopeman branch of the Highland railway. Population in 1891, 218.

HOPEMAN is a village situated 2 miles E. of Burghead, on the coast of the Moray Frith. It possesses a neat harbour, which in 1889 was greatly improved, but the shipping of the port is not extensive. There is a station on the new line of railway which was extended from Burghead to this place, and opened for traffic in 1892. There is a Free church here. Population in 1891, 1,464.

NEW DUFFUS is a small village near the parish church of Duffus, prettily situated, and entirely agricultural. Hopeman is the nearest railway station, two miles distant. Population in 1891, 121.

ROSEISLE is a hamlet near Burghead bay, 5 miles N.W. of Elgin. Colfield is the nearest stopping station, about a mile and a quarter away. Population returned with the parish.

EDENKILLIE AND DALLAS.

EDENKILLIE is a parish lying to the south of Forres. The church, which is near the centre of the parish, is about 9 miles s. from Forres, in a most romantic situation. It stands on the banks of the Divie, a black tumbling stream that dashes from rock to rock along the bottom of deep narrow ravines, and a little further down falls into the Findhorn. The woods of Darnaway on the west, and Altyre and Logie on the east, are very extensive and unsurpassed in beauty. The viaduct, which carries the Inverness and Perth Junction railway over the Divie, near the church of Edenkillie, is said to be the finest bridge in the north of Scotland. It has seven arches, and the height from the surface of the water to the rails is about 110 feet. There is a railway station in the parish, at DUNPHAIL. Population in 1881, 1,175, and in 1891, 989.

DALLAS is a parish 15 miles in length and 9 in breadth. The village is about 11 miles s.w. of Elgin, and 9 s.e. of Forres, which latter is the nearest railway station. Area of the parish, 22,903. Population in 1891, 915, and in 1891, 860.

ELGIN,

LOSSIEMOUTH, ALVES, NEW SPYNIE, BIRNIE, BISHOPMILL, LHANBRYDE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of its shire, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles N. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen and Huntly, and 153 by way of Perth and Forres, 83 N. of Brechin, 64 W. of Aberdeen, 39 N.E. of Inverness, 12 E. by N. of Forres, and 9 W. of Forchabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about 5 miles above its influx into the Moray Firth, at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills clad with pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said that from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seal of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion, a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence called Lady Hill, on the north-west side of the town. It is now the site of a monumental column erected by public subscription, in memory of the last Duke of Gordon. In 1224, Andrew, Bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the Church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin; but the cathedral was burned down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch), son of Robert II., in 1390, who was forced from his fastness, in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and superb edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, two hundred and sixty-four feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains nearly entire, and was some years since repaired and covered with a roof of lead by the Exchequer, is a specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect, is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins, which are carefully preserved by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, form a conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; while, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south, stands Anderson's Institution for the support of old age and the education of youth, a fine modern structure, erected by the munificent bequest of Major-General Andrew Anderson, R.E.I.C.S., a native of this place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000 and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground; it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youth, whilst with his right hand he is supporting the figure of an aged man. The building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the Institution, of whom there are fifty children of the working classes, who are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back or south wing, is the Free School, which has been taken over by the School Board Committee, and two new wings are being added at a cost of upwards of £2,000. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a hospital for the sick poor of this town and county. The building is delightfully seated upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome; the whole is spacious and built of stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillespie, of Edinburgh. Mr. John Munro, of Clinton House, has recently given £1,000 to this hospital for general improvement purposes. Another handsome building of importance is the Elgin Club House, situate in Commerce street. This building is in the Italian style of architecture and contains a reading room, entrance hall and billiard room. There are also card-rooms, keepers' apartments, and all other accessories finished and fitted up in an excellent manner from the designs of Messrs. Reid, of Elgin.

The principal street of the town is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stands the Established church, a beautiful modern structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq.; it is calculated to seat a congregation of two thousand. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns, and at the east end is a lofty tower, surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns. The building cost about £8,000. On the west of it is a raised and spacious pavement, used as a market place for farmers' produce, and also a beautiful fountain. In North street, commencing about the middle of the town, are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, erected in 1821, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, at a cost of £3,000. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish Episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. The Baptist chapel has been rebuilt on the old site, in Reidhaven street, at a cost of £1,400. During the last few years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and on the south side streets of villas have been erected, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves on the front of High street, have been pulled down, and new structures raised in their place. There are three good hotels—the Gordon Arms, in High street; the Station Hotel, facing the Great North of Scotland Railway station; and the Palace Hotel, in High street—which have every accommodation for private families and commercial gentlemen. Two newspapers are published here—the Elgin Courier and the Moray and Nairn Express. A handsome Town and County Hall stands upon an eminence, and as seen from the railway is, with its lofty tower, a very imposing addition to the architectural features of the south side of the town; it is built in the Jacobean style, from plans by Mr. A. Marshall Mackenzie, Aberdeen. An Academy, in the classical style, with Roman-Doric portico, from the plans of Messrs. A. & W. Reid, Elgin, was built in 1886, at a cost of £5,000. The Muckle Cross of Elgin, which was destroyed about 1790, has been restored and presented to the town by Mr. Macandrew, of Westwood House, Essex. It is a fac simile of the former one, and occupies the same site in High street. In High street are branches of the British Linen Company, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, Bank of Scotland, North of Scotland Bank, Limited, Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, Royal Bank of Scotland, Town and County Bank, Limited, and a Savings Bank. The Victoria School of Science and Art is so called from having been built as a memorial of Her Majesty's jubilee; it is in the later Romanesque style, from a design by Mr. George Sutherland, Elgin, and cost about £2,000. Being opposite the Academy, an arrangement has been made between the School Board and the local committee for it to form a scientific and technical department to the Academy.

The trade of Elgin has been greatly increased by the opening up of railway communication. There is a woollen manufactory, which employs many hands, and an iron foundry and saw mills. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool, and timber is of some consequence, and there is a large tannery, while in the neighbourhood are the famous distilleries of Milton Duff, Glenlossie, and Linkwood, also lime works and stone quarries. Alexander II., in 1234, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good; connected with the guild there is a flourishing charity fund from which decayed members and their families derive substantial pension. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverurie, Kintore and Perth and returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Alexander Asher, Esq. There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin. The weekly corn markets are held on Friday; cattle auctions are also held every Friday. The feeding markets are 26th May, if Friday, if not, Friday before, the first Friday in July (harvest), and the Friday before the 28th November. Population of the parish of Elgin in 1881, 9,843, and in 1891, 10,456, of which the burgh contained 7,799.

ALVES is a small parish, about 6½ miles long by 5½ miles wide, situated about 5 miles E. of Elgin. It contains an Established and a Free church, and two schools. There is a station here on the Forres and Keith section of the Highland railway. Acreage, 9,404. Population in 1881, 1,117, and in 1891, 1,096.

BIRNIE, a parish of 6,777 acres, distant about 3 miles S. of Elgin, is 7 miles in length, and averages about one and three-fourths in breadth. The church is supposed to be the oldest in Scotland. Elgin is the nearest railway station. Population in 1881, 367, and in 1891, 405.

On the opposite bank of the Lossie to that of Elgin is the village of BISHOPMILL, in the parish of New Spynie, the superior of which is the Earl of Seafield. It contains a few of the trades usually found in a country village, corn mills, and a public school. Elgin is the nearest railway station. Population returned with the parish.

LOSSIEMOUTH, which was created a burgh in 1830 under the Lindsay Act, is in the parish of Drainie, 5 miles N. from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx into the Moray Firth. It is the support of Elgin, and was fast advancing into importance, but since 1867 its trade has been gradually declining. Most of the town is regularly laid out, and is a resort for sea-bathers. Several gentlemen resident in Elgin have erected villas which they occupy during the summer months. A new harbour was opened in 1839, and has since been improved, so as to render it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. The cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. In 1891 a grant of £20,000 was obtained from the Government for deepening the harbour to admit vessels of larger tonnage. The improvement of the harbour, and the facilities of railway communication which this place has now enjoyed for several years, have given a stimulus to trade which has rendered it one of the most important seaports north of Aberdeen. A Town Hall was opened on February 2d, 1885, by Sir George Macpherson Grant, of Ballindalloch, M.P. and Mrs. Duubar Brander, Pitgaverty. The cost of the building was about £1,100. A new Free church, built on an imposing site commanding an extensive view of the Moray Firth, replaces one destroyed by fire. It is in the early English Gothic style, and its handsome octagon tower and spire serves as a notable landmark to mariners. It cost £2,400. The acreage of the parish of Drainie is 6,949, and its population in 1881 was 3,991, and in 1891, 3,922, Lossiemouth containing 3,482 of that number.

NEW SPYNIE is a parish lying to the north of and adjoining Elgin, and contains the village of BISHOPMILL. Acreage, 5,946. Population in 1881, 1,620.

ST. ANDREW'S LHANBRYDE parish comprehends what were originally two—St. Andrew's and Lhanbryde—the former including LINKWOOD and BARMUCKITY; the latter lay to the east of St. Andrew's, and comprehended the lands of Coxton, Patnasair, &c. There is a station here on the Highland railway. Acreage, 9,197. Population in 1881, 1,396; in 1891, 1,277.

About 3 miles E. of Elgin, and in the above-named parish, is the neat village of LHANBRYDE, having a good inn, saw mill, woollen mill, a few well-stored shops, schools, &c. It is noteworthy for its geological productions. There is a station here on the Highland railway.

FOCHABERS,

SPEYMOOUTH, GARMOUTH, KINGSTON, URQUHART, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 S.W. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N.W. of Keith; situated on the great north road from Edinburgh and Aberdeen to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it is an Episcopalian and a Free church; there is also a large chapel for Roman Catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crosses the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1829; it has subsequently been rebuilt. This is not an important town as respects trade. Its thoroughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the genteel neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. Fochabers is a burgh, and is governed by a baron bailie appointed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, whose seat (Gordon Castle) graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to and admiration of strangers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and, perhaps, the finest mansion north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was originally a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a drawbridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 563 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park, and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway at the west end of the town. The body of the building rises to the height of four lofty storeys, and on each end is a pavilion of two storeys, connected by a gallery of two lower storeys. The ancient tower, which is 90 feet high, overlooks the whole structure, and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art. The baths—the gift of the late Duchess of Richmond and Gordon—are much appreciated by the inhabitants; as is also the water supply to the burgh, which was laid at the sole expense of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and the inhabitants have erected a fountain in the square to commemorate the same. At the eastern end of the town stands an elegant building in the Elizabethan style of architecture; this is a free school, founded by Alexander Milne, Esq., a native of Fochabers. By his will, dated New Orleans, 17th October, 1836, he bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Ordish the sum of £40,000 dollars for establishing a free school. The cost of erecting the building amounted to £4,388, about £17,000 being invested in heritable security, yielding an annual income of £740, by means of which 500 children are educated. An extension of the Highland railway to the burgh of Fochabers is now (1892) about to be commenced. Cattle markets are held on the third Thursdays in January and February, fourth Wednesday in March, fourth Thursdays in April and May, first Thursday in July, second Wednesday in August, and first Thursdays in October and December. The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the Kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banffshire. It is 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and on the south-east by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here, east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground, which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. The entire parish of Bellie, which covers an area of 12,927 acres, contained in 1881 a population of 2,365, and in 1891, 1,914, of which 1,101 belonged to Fochabers.

URQUHART is a parish of 13,066 acres, extending from the river Spey to the river Lossie, a distance of about 6 miles, the breadth being about 5 miles. The village of Urquhart is very small, and about a mile and a half from Lhanbryde. The population of Urquhart parish in 1881 was 2,199, and in 1891, 1,917.

GARMOUTH and KINGSTON are small villages in the quoad sacra parish of SPEYMOOUTH, but locally in the civil parish of Urquhart, with which parish the population is returned; they are between 4 and 5 miles N.W. of Fochabers, the former situated at the mouth of the Spey, on its left bank. The principal trade is ship building, and the exportation of corn, timber, and salmon—of the latter considerable quantities are sent principally to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone manure, timber and coal. The port formerly had a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey, and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A cattle market is held on June 30th.

FINDHORN, KINLOSS, RAFFORD, DYKE AND MOY.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of a presbytery; 201 mile N. by W. from Edinburgh, by way of Aberdeen, 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 75 N.W. of Aberdeen, 27 N.E. of Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 N. of Nairn. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at a distance of about 5 miles from the village, and 2 from the bay of Findhorn, which is its seaport. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks of ancient date in Britain. This interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the 11th century. It is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a highland broadsword; the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town, on an eminence, once stood a castle, wherein Duffus, one of the early Kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donald, governor of the fortress, which circumstance, it is said, Shakespeare has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that the hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians) met the "weird sisters," who gave him so many fatal promises. The exact spot on which that event is asserted by the country people to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post road between Forres and Nairn, near the toll bar, 5 miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn. The extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet "blasted," being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. On the castle eminence has been erected an obelisk to the memory of Dr. Thomson, who sacrificed his life by over exertion in his attention to the wounded Russians, after the famous battle of Alma. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower, erected by the inhabitants of Forres in honour of Lord Nelson, the walk to which, as it winds round the hill, is extremely pleasant. From its elevated situation, a fine view is hence obtained, and the object is a conspicuous one for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north, where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the Forest of Darnaway, is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray. Adjoining it is the old castle, a noble hall built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing one thousand men under arms. Here Mary Queen of Scots held her court in 1566. Formerly the heron was so numerous in this part, that whole flocks, it is said, at times darkened the air, and drowned with their cries

the sound of the gushing waters. About two miles below the river, which is the estuary of Findhorn Bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, which was erected by a joint stock company, in shares of £10 each. The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. Dye Works, manufactories for woollens, artificial manures, boots and shoes and bobbins, chemical works and flour mills being the principal branches. Three-quarters of a mile from the centre of the town is situated the Leachnoll Hospital, erected in 1891, at a cost of between £6,000 and £7,000, accommodation being provided for the burgh of Forres and the six adjoining parishes. There are four branch banking establishments, and several good hotels. A newspaper is published in the town—the Forres, Elgin and Nairn Gazette, on Wednesday. Owing to the configuration of the country round about Forres, the burgh enjoys a remarkable immunity from rain, the rainfall for the past few years having been ascertained from accurate observations to be about the lowest in Scotland, and this circumstance, and the soil being porous, mark out Forres as an excellent health resort. Cluny Hill House, which stands on one of the beautiful eminences in the immediate vicinity of the town, was built expressly for a hydropathic establishment, and its situation is peculiarly favourable for invalids. There are two masonic lodges in the town. Forres, as before stated, is a royal burgh, and governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and eleven councillors, and unites with Nairn, Fortrose and Inverness, in returning member to Parliament, the present representative being Gilbert Beith, Esq. A sheriff small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debts not exceeding £12. In the centre of the High street is a substantial structure surmounted by a spire. The building comprises the gaol, a court house, a council room, &c., and near to this stands a handsome market cross, in the style of Sir Walter Scott's monument in Edinburgh. The Mechanics' Institute, also in High street, a fine building, the property of the burgh, possesses a library, a reading room, and two public halls; the large hall of recent erection, and is capable of seating 1,000 persons. At the south-east end is a good stone edifice, erected in 1824, called Anderson's Institution, for educating children of the humble classes of Forres, Rafford, and Kinloss, founded by Jonathan Anderson, Esq., a native of Forres, and opposite to it stands the public school. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and others for congregations of Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Evangelical Union, and Baptists. A corn market is held every Tuesday, and a cattle market every alternate Tuesday; cattle sales are also held in the auction mart every Tuesday. Feeding markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th of May (called Whitsunday market), and the Saturday before the 22nd of November (called Martinmas market), all new style. The population of the entire parish of Forres was in 1881, 4,752; and 1891, 4,801; of this number 4,081 were returned for the royal and parliamentary burgh in 1881, and 4,024 at the latter date.

FINDHORN is a small village and seaport in the parish of Kinloss, 5 miles N. of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Burghhead on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west. The latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, potatoes, and wood; the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the collieries. The imports consist of coal, guano, slates, tiles, lime, and different kinds of goods. The village was connected by a branch line three miles in length with the Inverness and Junction Aberdeen Railway, but since its discontinuance the trade has rapidly declined. The village contains a Free church and a public school. Kinloss railway station is 3 miles distant. Population in 1881, 608.

KINLOSS is a parish and village, the latter situated 2 miles N.W. from Forres, and contains an Established church and a public school. There is a station here on the Elgin and Keith section of the Highland line. Acreage of the parish, 5,181. Population in 1881, 1,072, and in 1891, 958.

DYKE and MOY is a parish situated on the river Findhorn and the Moray Firth. It is about 4 miles W. of Forres, and in length it is about 6 by a breadth of 3½ miles. At BRODIE, in this parish, is a station on the Highland railway. There is an Established church, a Free church and also a public school. The parish of Dyke and Moy comprises 15,679 acres, and contained in 1881, 1,236 persons, and in 1891, 1,044.

RAFFORD is a parish 3 miles S.E. of Forres, situated on the river Findhorn. In length it is about 8 by a breadth of 4 miles. The places of worship are one of the Established and a Free church. A market of cattle is held on the second Wednesday in November. Acreage, 12,456. Forres is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant. Population in 1881, 1,052, and in 1891, 982.

GRANTOWN,

CROMDALE, INVERALLAN, AND STRATHSPEY.

GRANTOWN is a neat modern village in the parish of CROMDALE, the latter lying formerly in this county and that of Inverness, but by a recent Act of Parliament the whole of the parish is incorporated with this county. Grantown is situated in that district of the parish called Inverallan, on the north bank of the Spey, rather more than a mile south of Castle Grant, one of the seats of the Dowager Countess of Seafield, and at the distance of 35 miles S.E. from Inverness, 22 s. from Forres, 8 N.E. from Duthil, and 6 N. from Abernethy. Grantown was begun about the year 1774, under the patronage of the Grant family, who have been its continued benefactors; and a large number of the inhabitants retain the name of Grant to the present day. It is a great attraction for visitors from Edinburgh and Glasgow during the summer months, and during the last few years several handsome villas have been built for their accommodation. In 1887 the Highland railway erected a commodious station, which is situated about a mile from the centre of the village. There is also a station on the Great North of Scotland line, a mile and a half distant. The trade of the place is of a retail and domestic character, there being a fair proportion of first-class shops and businesses which are usually found in a small country town. There is a distillery in its vicinity, and a large extensive wholesale and retail grocery and drapery business carried on by Macdougall & Co.; and in the village are established three banks, namely, branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited; there is also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are also three excellent and commodious hotels—the Black Bull, Grant Arms, and Strathspey. Besides the parish church in Cromdale, there is a quoad sacra parish church, a handsome stone edifice, built in 1884 by Caroline Stuart, Dowager Countess of Seafield, a Free church, and a Baptist chapel in Grantown. A Sheriff Small Debt Circuit Court is held on the first Wednesday after the 16th of January, and the first Wednesday in May and September. There are several schools, noticed under their proper head, and also an orphan institution. A neat Cottage Hospital was built in 1884 by the Dowager Countess of Seafield in memory of Ian Charles, late Earl of Seafield.

Fairs are held on the Tuesday after the 12th and Monday before third Wednesday in January, Monday before third Wednesday in February, Monday before third Wednesday in March (cattle, horses, sheep, and hiring), Thursday before third Wednesday in April (sheep), Monday after third Wednesday in April (horses, cattle, and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday in May (horses, cattle, and sheep), last Tuesday in April (hiring), Monday after Beaulieu, for horses, cattle, and sheep, and first Friday (Figgot Fair) in June, Monday after third Thursday in July (horses, cattle, and sheep), first Wednesday (shearers'), and Monday after third Tuesday (horses, cattle, and sheep) in August; Monday after third Tuesday in September (horses, cattle, and sheep), Monday after third Tuesday in October (cattle and sheep), Monday after second Wednesday (horses, &c.), and first Thursday (hiring) in November. Population in 1881, 1,374, and in 1891, 1,421.

CROMDALE is an extensive parish in the Strathspey district. The village is situated 4 miles N.E. from Grantown, and contains both an Established and a Free church. There is a station here on the Strathspey branch of the Great North of Scotland railway. At BALMENACH, about a mile from the village, is situated the old established distillery of Messrs. John McGregor & Son. The population of the entire parish was in 1881, 3,642, and in 1891, 3,508.

KNOCKANDO WITH ARCHIESTOWN.

KNOCKANDO is a parish 6 miles s.w. from Rothes, situated on the north side of the river Spey, with Rothes on the east, Dalles and Birnie on the north, and Cromdale and Edenkille on the west. Its length is about 15 miles by a breadth of about 6, enclosing an area of 28,134 statute acres. The country is hilly, and generally pastoral. In 1829 severe floods occurred in Moray, and this parish suffered very seriously, many families being rendered destitute. The burn of Knockando, a small rivulet, was on this occasion swollen to a size equal to that of the Spey in its ordinary state. There is an Established church, and in ARCHIESTOWN, a village in this parish, is a Free church and one for the United Presbyterians. The population of the parish was in 1881, 1,888, and in 1891, 1,712; of the latter number 887 were returned for Archiestown.

ROTHES,

AND THE PARISH OF BOHARM.

ROTHES is a parish partly in the county of Elgin and partly in that of Banff. It is bounded on the south by Knockando, on the north by Elgin, Birnie, &c., and on the east by the river Spey; it is 9 miles in length by an average breadth of 3, embracing 19,816 statute acres. The town, which was formed into a police burgh, in 1884, is about 60 miles W. N. W. from Aberdeen, and 10 S. from Elgin, situated near the western bank of the Spey. The name is derived from Ruddk-ius, signifying "red water," from the colour of the soil of which the banks of its streams are composed. The Great North of Scotland Railway have a station here, and the Highland Railway Company one at ORTON, in the lower end of the parish. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. There are three distilleries in the town, the chief of which is the Glen Grant Glenlivet Distillery, established in 1840; mention may also be made of the Macallan Distillery, located in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held on the 1st Thursday in April; 4th Monday in July (cattle and harvest feeing); and 4th Thursday in November (feeing). The parish contained in 1881 a population numbering 2,201, and in 1891, 2,299, of which 1,548 were returned for the town.

BOHARM is a parish in the county of Banff, 8 miles E. N. E. from Rothes, bounded on the west by the river Spey, on the east by the parish of Keith, on the north by Fochabers, and on the south by the parish of Mortlach; it is 6 miles in length, with an average breadth of 5, embracing 16,741 acres, and is entirely an agricultural parish.

There is an Established church and a Free church. Population in 1891, 1,266.

FIFESHIRE.

THIS is an extensive, populous, and important county, lying on the eastern side of Scotland. It is a peninsula, having the Firth of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth from its eastern apex to its western point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than ten miles across; the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is fully forty miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superficies comprise 492 square miles, or 314,962 acres. In regard to size, this county is sixteenth, and in population the seventh.

EARLY HISTORY.—At an early period the district of Fife included Kinross-shire, Clackmannan-shire, and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name “Fife” has much troubled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fyfus Dufius, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity. Its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and towards the close of the ninth century the King of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a succession of “thanes” of the title of Macduff; one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm III., about 1057; and from this time till the family honours were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After a lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbride, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The Duke of Fife, who was raised to a dukedom in 1889, is the lineal descendant of this person, and now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps, and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V., who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soil, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of the country. Along the braes facing the Firth of Forth the composition of the land is for the most part excellent, being deep, rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin rock, and produces good crops of wheat, barley, oats, beans, turnips and potatoes; north from the waving line which bound this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrews on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor and very wet clay; the tract of the “Howe of Fife,” which comprises both sides of the river Eden as far as Cupar, is very productive; it consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved, or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits on its surface a series of vales, stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions; these vales, which from the undulating character of the country are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Firth of Forth or St. Andrews Bay. Extending in a north-easterly direction to the Tay, the Ochil Hills penetrate the county, forming a ridge of moderate elevation, upon which many cattle and sheep are pastured. The other eminences of greatest altitude in Fife-shire are Kelly Law, 800 feet; Norman’s Law, 850; Largo Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280 feet above the level of the sea. The CLIMATE of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south; the fogs, which formerly were continually exhaling from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands, and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Altogether Fife is a most important district; its agricultural prosperity and capabilities, its manufactures, its fisheries, and its mineral treasures, its burghs, seaports, and fine harbours, and its domestic and foreign commerce, form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured probably in North Britain.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places, so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it has a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kenbuck; pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places, with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which many towns, villages, and hamlets are busily employed without intermission; fine diapers and shirtings, and the most elegant table linen are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy are the principal seats; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Iron founding and machine making are prosecuted with success at several places, and the manufacture of fishing nets, floor cloth, fire clay and terra cotta goods and linoleums and floor cloths are likewise branches of importance. The fisheries are also a source of wealth to this county, shoals of herrings during the spawning season visiting its coast, in the capturing and curing of which many of the population are employed. Turbot, soles, plaice, cod, haddock and ling are also found in abundance, the three first-named being taken in the shallow waters on the east coast.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of river, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. Fife cannot boast of many lakes, and those that it does possess are but of small extent, the principal being Ludders, Kilconquhar, Lochgelly, Camilla and Fitty lochs. The North British line of railway runs direct through the county on the sea board, from Burntisland to St. Andrews, having various branches running landwards, to the counties of Clackmannan, Kinross and Perth, exclusive of the various branches for mineral traffic leading to the different shipping ports on the northern banks of the Forth. The route of the respective branches will be best ascertained by reference to the towns given in the Directory of the shire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute; in these two districts are comprehended the four subdivisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Firth of Forth. Fife comprises sixty-one parishes and two parts of parishes, having thirteen royal burghs with parliamentary representation; these conjointly with Culross in Perthshire, Queensferry in Linlithgowshire, and Stirling in Stirlingshire, return three members. The shire formerly returned but one representative, but is now separated into the East and West Divisions, each of which sends a member. The gentlemen now sitting are: East Division, Right Hon. Herbert H. Asquith, Q.C.; West Division, Augustine Birrell, Esq. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was: East Division, 9,133; West Division, 9,800. The lord lieutenant is the Right Hon. the Earl of Elgin and Kincardine. By the census returns for 1851, the population of the entire shire was 171,931, and by those for 1891, 187,820, exhibiting an increase over 1851 of 15,889. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was £673,779 of railways and waterworks, £115,458.

ABERDOUR

IS a parish and village—the latter, which is also a seaport, is 10 miles N.W. from Edinburgh (across the Firth of Forth), 9 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, 10 S.E. from Dunfermline, and 3 W. from Burntisland. There is a station here on the line of railway, opened 1890, connecting Inverkeithing and Burntisland. The district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm. The small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour, the form of the latter being nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way, and containing 5,974 acres; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills which run from east to west. It is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged in the twelfth century to the family of the Euponts, from whom it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom, in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident about a century and a half ago. Aberdour is a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing grounds here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. One of the chief causes of its popularity as a bathing place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore, there being frequent communication in the summer season. In the village are Established, Free and Episcopal churches; there are also two Board schools in the parish. Donibristle Park, the seat of the Right Hon. George Earl of Moray, is beautifully situated at the east end of the village, overlooking the Forth. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,796, and in 1891, 1,977.

ANSTRUTHER (EASTER AND WESTER),

CELLARDYKE, AND THE PARISH OF KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, a royal burgh, and a station on the Leven and East of Fife branch of the North British Railway, in the County of Fife, is 22 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and about 10 S.E. from St. Andrews by road, but 15 by rail. It is bounded on the north by Kilrenny, on the South by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Cellardyke, and on the west by Anstruther Wester. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and from its contiguity with Cellardyke, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. Fish curing is the staple trade. In 1825, there were only 58 boats, from 18 to 30 feet long; now the number is about 200, from 50 feet long, as well as three steam line fishing vessels, 88 feet keel, built at a cost of £2,600 each. The harbour was found too small for the increasing trade of the district, and the three burghs of Easter and Wester Anstruther and Cellardyke united their efforts to obtain, with Government assistance, an union harbour, which has cost about £80,000. The present harbours (inner and outer), give a space of 18½ acres, and will accommodate 600 fishing boats, and admit vessels from 200 to 500 tons burthen at half flood; there is about four feet of water at the East Quay at the lowest spring tide. The trade, in addition to fish curing, is of a domestic nature, but there is likewise a considerable amount of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c. Anstruther was until recently the terminus of the Leven and East of Fife Branch of the North-British Railway, but on the 1st of June, 1887, the line was opened for through traffic to St. Andrews and Dundee. Branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are settled here. The town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and nine councillors (which includes the above mentioned officials), elected under the Scotch Burgh Reform Act. A sheriff's small debt court is held here quarterly, for the parishes of Anstruther Easter and Wester, Elie, Kilconquhar, Kilrenny, Newburn, Pittenweem, St. Monance, and Crail. A weekly corn market is held on Friday. This burgh unites with St. Andrews, Cupar, Crail, Kilrenny, Anstruther Wester, and Pittenweem, in returning one member to Parliament. It is worthy of note that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and Professor Tennant, author of "Anster Fair," were natives of this town, and also Professor Goodsir, of the Edinburgh University. In addition to the Established church, there are a Free church, called Chalmers' Memorial Church, erected at a cost of nearly £10,000, an United Presbyterian church, and Evangelical and Baptist chapels; also public schools and a private seminary for young ladies. The chief educational establishment here is the Waid Academy, which was opened Sept. 6th, 1886. It was endowed mainly from funds mortified by Andrew Waid, lieutenant in the Royal Navy, a native of Anstruther, who died in 1803. His will, which was dated in the year 1800, narrates that he had through life entertained a very favourable opinion of the Royal Navy, and been much attached to its prosperity, and that he had for several years deliberately entertained a resolution, after making some provision for his relations and connections, to appropriate his whole heritable and moveable estate for the building of an academy for the accommodation of orphan boys and seamen's boys in indigent circumstances, and for their maintenance, clothing and such education as would instruct them in the great principle of the Christian religion, and fit them for serving in the British Navy with reputation, to the end that religion and the Navy might flourish and advance to the end of time. The trustees acting under the will were of opinion that the funds left by the deceased were inadequate for the full accomplishment of his design, and besides, that under the changed conditions of naval warfare, a hospital at Anstruther, for the purpose contemplated by Lieutenant Waid, would now be comparatively of little value. The amount of the Trust estate at his death was about £5,000, but at the time of the transfer to the governors of the academy it was of the value of about £15,000. Accordingly a scheme promoted by the Trustees and by the School Board of Anstruther Easter and others was laid before the commissioners under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882, and with some amendments was adopted by them, and approved by Her Majesty the Queen in Council on August 11th, 1884. Lieutenant Waid in his will expressed a hope that his intentions might be greatly aided and extended by the charitable contributions of many good members of society, and in accordance with that anticipation Stephen Williamson, Esq., M.P., has contributed £1,000 towards the funds. The school, which is built of stone, with a tower in the centre, has a fine commanding appearance. The population of the burgh, parliamentary and royal, was in 1881, 1,349, and in 1891, 1,134.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a parish and royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James IV., in 1587. A bridge connects the two burghs. It is bounded on the north by other land in the parish of Anstruther Wester, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Anstruther Easter, and on the west by Pittenweem. This burgh was disfranchised in 1853, when three managers were appointed by the court of session. In 1869 it again recovered its municipal status, and is now governed by a chief magistrate, one bailie, a treasurer, and nine councillors, including the officials named. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last forty years; among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its being macadamised, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement, at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and the county. The place is supplied by water, the streets well lighted, common sewers and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state. A parish church manse and offices for the clergyman, and a parochial school and dwelling house for the schoolmaster, were also erected. Population in 1881, 678, and in 1891, 593.

KILRENNY is a parish and royal burgh; the former is situated one mile from Anstruther, and three from Crail. The parish approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Crail, and on the west by the two Anstruthers. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks, which form the harbour of Anstruther, and the port of Cellardyke, or Nether Kilrenny. Here is an Established church, and there are a quoad sacra church at Cellardyke, and two public schools. This burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors, and in conjunction with the Anstruthers, and other places before named, returns one member to Parliament. The population of the entire parish in 1881 was 3,270, 101 of this number being included in the parliamentary burgh of Easter Anstruther, and in 1891, 2,889. The nearest railway station is at Anstruther, about a mile distant.

The village of CELLARDYKE (or NETHER KILRENNY), is an extensive fishing village in the above parish, and is contiguous to Anstruther, before described, forming part of the burgh of Kilrenny. There is a small harbour for fishing boats here. The three burghs are so contiguous to each other that to a stranger the separation is not discernible. Its ancient name was "The Silverdick." Cellardyke is specially noted for its oil clothing, fishing material, and net manufacturing, a considerable number of persons being employed in these industries. The greater number of the inhabitants are fishermen, about 200 boats belonging to the place. There has recently been erected and presented to the burgh, by Stephen Williamson, Esq., and the representatives of the late James Fowler, Esq., natives of Cellardyke, a handsome Town Hall, which includes council, reading and amusement rooms. The nearest railway station is at Anstruther, about half a mile distant.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.
Station, ANSTRUTHER—John Smart, station master

AUCHTERMUCHTY,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF DUNSHALT.

AUCHTERMUCHTY is a parish and a royal burgh; the latter 22 miles S.S.W. from Dundee, 19 W.S.W. from St. Andrews, 14 S.S.E. from Perth, 5 S. from Newburgh, 15 N. from Kirkcaldy, and 28 nearly due north from Edinburgh. A station of the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway is adjacent to the town, and there is one at LADYBANK, a junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the above named railway, about 5 miles distant. The land in the vicinity of the town is remarkably rich and fertile, and the climate is considered very salubrious. Auchtermuchty is situated on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, 10 miles from the former and 9 from the latter town. It is irregularly built, many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater portion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. A stream of water called Lover's pool runs through the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James IV., which charter was confirmed by James VI., and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, twelve councillors, a treasurer and town clerk, and has a sheriff's small debt court, which is held quarterly. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen. Malt and distilling are likewise engaged in, and the making of scales, beams and weighing machines has been established here for upwards of a century. There are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland and Union Bank of Scotland (Limited), and a Savings bank. The Victoria Hall, erected in 1866, is a building well worthy of notice.

The places of worship comprise an Established, a Free, and two United Presbyterian churches, and one for Baptists. The parish church is an old structure enlarged, and situated near the centre of the town. There are two B and A schools, and a large school conducted on the Madras principle is numerously attended. The People's Institute, commenced by a few ladies and gentlemen for the improvement of the working population, comprises reading, recreation, and temperance refreshment rooms. There is also another reading room in the town, and a well stocked library. Fairs are held on the last Monday in April, and July 2nd. Acreage of the parish, 5,530. Population in 1891, 3,002.

DUNSHALT is a small village situated about one mile S. from and in the parish of Auchtermuchty, where there is a linen factory and a Board school. Auchtermuchty railway station is about half a mile distant.

POST, TELEGRAPH AND MONEY ORDER OFFICE AND SAVINGS BANK, AUCHTERMUCHTY, William Sucks, Post Master.—Deliveries, 9 a.m. 6.15 p.m.; despatches, 7.15 a.m. 4.5 p.m.
SUB-POST OFFICE, DUNSHALT, James Austin, Post Master.—Deliveries, 9.40 a.m. 7 p.m.; despatches, 3.10, 5.20 p.m.
Letters for Auchtermuchty should be addressed "FIFESHIRE," and those for Dunshalt, "near AUCHTERMUCHTY, FIFESHIRE."
Where the address is not given, the names are all in AUCHTERMUCHTY.

BURNTISLAND

Is a royal and parliamentary burgh seaport and metropolitan ferry, situated on the north shore of the Firth of Forth, and in the centre of the south boundary of the parish to which it gives its name. It is distant 9½ miles N. by W. from Edinburgh, 16 S.E. from Kinross, 6 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 3 E. from Aberdeen. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailies and ten councillors. The town council are also the police commissioners, the local authority, and four members of the town council with four representatives from the N. B. Railway Company constitute the Harbour commissioners. There is besides a parochial board, but having jurisdiction solely of poor law business. The town council, acting under the Burial Grounds Act, acquired five acres of ground at Buntfield for a cemetery, at a cost of about £4,000. For school board purposes there are two boards—one for the burgh and another for the parish having separate offices and schools for both burgh and parish. The municipal, police and parliamentary boundaries have been made identical by an Act obtained in 1876. The first election under the new Act took place on the 1st November, 1876. On the same day a section of the Act granting the same powers to the magistrates as are at present possessed by the sheriff and justices of peace under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, came into operation. This admits of the administration of justice in nautical cases being conducted in the town instead of in Kirkcaldy as previously. Burntisland is now the headquarters of the custom house business for the district, which embraces the line of coast from Aberdeen to Anstruther. The burgh of Burntisland is one of the Kirkcaldy district of burghs represented by J. H. Dalziel, Esq. There are police and bailie courts, the sheriff courts for the burgh being held weekly at Kirkcaldy. There are branches of the National and Commercial Banks of Scotland, Limited, and a savings bank, an Established church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians, a Roman Catholic chapel, and an Episcopal church and school, a public school, a variety of benefit societies, and a railway institute and reading room. New Board schools were erected here in 1876, at a cost of £6,000, in the Elizabethan style; they are situated in front of a hill rising more than 100 feet above the level of the sea. Two wings have recently been added to the original buildings in order to accommodate the increasing number of scholars, and another addition is now (1892) being made. The playgrounds are ample, and the terrace in front is tastefully laid out. There are no weekly markets, but there is an annual fair held on the third Friday in July.

Previous to the union, Burntisland was a place of great trade, particularly with Holland. Since 1603 its trade declined till 1848, when the opening of the Fife railway imparted an impetus to the export trade in coal and pig iron. Since the opening of the new dock the harbour revenue, then £2,200 annually, has since increased till in 1883 it amounted to £27,055. This dock, built by Mr. Walter Scott, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, from plans by Messrs. T. Meik and Sons, C.E. comprises an area of 5½ acres, and cost about £100,000, including railway connections and hydraulic lifting machinery by Sir William Armstrong & Co. of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The depth of water in the dock is 22ft. 9in. at high water of spring tides, and 19ft. 9in. at neap tides; the width of entrance is 50ft. Consequent upon the completion of the Forth bridge, the ferry traffic in goods and passengers greatly decreased, but being still a metropolitan ferry, the North British Railway Co. is obliged to keep a steamer plying at stated intervals between Burntisland and Granton. The new railway from Burntisland westward to the Forth Bridge has opened up a picturesque district some eight miles in extent. The cost of this line was over £140,000, being opened for traffic in March, 1890. The line enters Burntisland by a long viaduct, which passes at the bottom of High street and crosses Harbour place, reaching the main line about two hundred yards east of the present terminus. The want of a direct line to the coalfields has been much felt, and this line brings those in the west of Fife into closer communication with the Harbour of Burntisland. The herring curing trade, which used to be very flourishing, may now be said to be extinct, although Burntisland is still a fishing station for the Firth fishery, a number of boats being annually engaged in the winter herring fishing. There is a distillery at Grange, about a mile from the town, belonging to Messrs. Young & Co. Limited. The very extensive works of the Burntisland Oil Co. Limited, about one mile from the town, were opened in 1882, and at present give employment to about 800 hands. The music hall, built by the late Joseph Young, of Duneairn, and presented to the town by his trustees, accommodates 400, and is frequently used for lectures, concerts, and public meetings. The only mortification belonging to Burntisland is Watson's, consisting of the annual rent of the East Binnlands, amounting to an average of £60, which is divided between three widows and the Board schoolmaster for the education of poor children.

The railway locomotive works, situated between the Lammerlaws and the old town, employed 800 men previous to the amalgamation of the Fife Railway and the North British, but subsequent to that event this number was reduced. Within a few years the staff was again increased, but the practical abolition of the railway traffic over the ferry, and Burntisland having ceased to be a railway terminus, any further increase is improbable. At the station, which has been altered to meet local requirements, &c., is the Forth Hotel, formerly the parish manse, but acquired by the late Sir John Gladstone, who built the ferry pier and the present manse, which he exchanged for the hotel buildings. The present gasworks also owe their origin to Sir John, who sold them to the Fife Railway Company, by whom they were transferred to the North British, when their line was amalgamated with that system. The gasworks have now become the property of the burgh, and are managed by the members of the town council as a gas commission. Burntisland is largely frequented by visitors, who in the summer months add considerably to its population. The only object of antiquity connected with Burntisland is Rosend Castle, built in 1119, by the abbots of Dunfermline. It occupies a very picturesque situation, and its windows are so arranged that one or other of them catches sunshine every instant of its duration throughout the year. It was the residence of Cromwell during the occupation of Burntisland by his troops, and was a favourite resting place of Queen Mary. Rosend is now the property of James Shepherd, Esq., who takes a great interest in antiquarian researches, but there are still vaults unexplored.

The parish, originally a portion of Kinghorn, is three miles square and consists of the Bin and Duneairn ranges of hills, with the High Bents on the east side of the town, extending into Kinghorn parish. Some portions of the hills contain fine specimens of basaltic columns. They are eruptive through limestone and sandstone strata. The sandstone quarries at Grange and Newbigging give out extensive supplies of stone for buildings in the neighbourhood, and quantities are shipped at Starleyburn for other places. The limestone mine, belonging to the Carron Co., at Starleyburn, which was closed for some years, has again been opened up and additional facilities given for the transit of the material by a connection with the new railway, which is in close proximity. It was formerly worked on the east hills, and the exhausted workings there are objects of interest to the tourist, who also finds agreeable walks towards Duneairn, the back of the Bin and Kinghorn both by the new and old roads. The rock which marks the spot where Alexander III. met his death in 1286, is situated beyond the limits of the parish on the south side of the new Kinghorn road, and is now marked by a handsome monument, which will be found more fully described under the historical notice of Kinghorn. Burntisland was originally a burgh of regality under the Abbot of Dunfermline. In the year 1541 it was purchased from him by James V., and erected in a burgh royal, confirmed by James VI. in 1587, and renewed by Charles I. in 1632.

The Established church, bearing the date 1592 over its entrance, is probably the oldest building in the town. In style it is after the model of the North Church, Amsterdam, the Dutch having a great deal of intercourse with Burntisland at that date. The galleries, which show very antique carvings, were erected in 1613, and it was within these walls that James VI. met the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and pressed his pet proposal for a new translation of the Scriptures, a proposal which took practical shape after that monarch's accession to the throne of England, and resulted in an authorised version. The reason Burntisland acquired this historical distinction was because the Forth was so stormy at the time that the king could not cross it to attend the Assembly in Edinburgh, and the Assembly complacently crossed to Burntisland to meet the king. An Episcopal school, founded by the late Rev. G. H. Forbes, continues to be conducted by his trustees; and the Episcopal congregation are now accommodated in an iron church of a new Gothic design, at Ferguson place, under the charge of the Rev. W. Dundas Walker, M.A. Acreage of the parish, 2,565. Population in 1881, 4,821, and in 1891, 5,663.

CRAIL AND KINGSBARNs.

CRAIL is a parish, a royal burgh, and a seaport—the latter 26 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and 10 S.E. from St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by Denino and Kingsbarns, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by Carnbee and Kilsrenny. It was anciently called Caryle or Cair-rail, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note so early as the middle of the ninth century. Its importance in latter days has, however, greatly declined, notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, and with the exception of crab fishing, for which it is famous, it enjoys but very little trade. This in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour—for it is otherwise eligibly situated. Its principal exports consist of grain and potatoes; the imports are chiefly coals. The town consists of two streets and two or three lanes. Of the former, one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses, several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past wealth. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle, or palace, once the residence of David I., the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partly enclosed in a garden. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce, and it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors. In conjunction with St. Andrews, Cupar Fife, the Austruthers, Kilsrenny, and Pittenweem, it returns one member to Parliament. The parish church, Free church, and United Presbyterian church are the places of worship. The parish church was anciently a collegiate church, and is the same that was preached in by John Knox, when he roused the people to go with him to Anstruther, and then to St. Andrews. The celebrated James Sharp, Archbishop of St. Andrews, was once minister of the church, and his handwriting is still to be seen in the session records. There are public schools, one for infants, and one private school in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 6,868. Population in 1881, 1,644, of which the town contained 1,148, and in 1891, 1,625.

KINGSBARNs is a parish containing the village of its own name, situated in the eastern part of the county, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail, on the east by the German Ocean, and on the west by St. Leonard's and Crail. Its length is about 3½ miles, and its greatest breadth 2½. The railway station is about a mile from the village. Originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1831. The village lies a mile to the south on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles S.E. from St. Andrews, and 3½ N. from Crail. Pitmilny, a very ancient seat, stands in the northern part of the parish. Cambo, the seat of the former Earls of Kellie, now of Sir Thomas Erskine, is in the south portion of the parish. Acreage, 4,074. Population in 1881, 795, and in 1891, 753.

CUPAR-FIFE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CERES, CREICH, KEMBACK, DAIRSIE, KILMANY, LOGIE, MONIMAIL, AND MOONZIE, INCLUDING
THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF BOW OF FIFE, BRIGHTON, BRUNTON, EASTER FERNIE, LETHAM, LUTHRIE, RATHILLET, SPRINGFIELD, BLEBO CRAIGS, CRAIGROTHIE, AND PITSCOTTIE.

CUPAR (properly designated CUPAR-FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire), is a royal burgh, the capital of the county of Fife, 52 miles N. (by rail, via Forth Bridge) from Edinburgh, 12½ S. from Dundee, 9 W. from St. Andrews, and the same distance N.E. from Falkland; pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Eden, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee branch of the North British Railway, and contains the villages of SPRINGFIELD and BRIGHTON. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day its aspect is that of a modern town, nor are there any ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar. Of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestige is now visible; the Castle hill, where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay and the "Satire of the Three Estates" were acted in 1555), is now used as a Public School; and the spot which once resounded with the clamour of arms is now devoted to learning. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the new town of Edinburgh; in this street are the County Buildings and two hotels. Opposite the County Buildings is an Episcopal church, in the Grecian style; its site is clearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars, in old records described as being situated to the east end of the town. The streets and shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1890. On the south side of the river is the old prison, said to resemble the old gaol at Glasgow; it is now used as a store and depot for the Fife Militia Artillery, a more commodious edifice having been erected for a gaol on rising ground a little to the north of the Dundee road, but which is now closed. A fine building in Crossgate, called the Duncan Institute, was founded by the late Miss Duncan, of Edengrove, for the benefit chiefly of the working classes. It consists of reading room, library, museum, and lecture hall, and is managed by trustees appointed by that lady. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture, but there are also other branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coach building, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are five branch banks—one of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, together with a bank for savings. Four newspapers are published in Cupar, weekly. As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and eighteen councillors. Being the county town and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. The ordinary sheriff court and the sheriff small debts court are held every Thursday during session.

The places of worship are the parish church and a chapel in connection therewith, and others for the Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Baptist, and Roman Catholic congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science evidences the polished taste of the inhabitants. The parish of Cupar contains 5,736 acres. The weekly market for corn is held on Tuesday, and a cattle market on Tuesday once a month. The parish in 1881 had a population of 6,990, the town of Cupar the same period having 4,727.

CERES, or Cyrus, is a parish and village—the former situated on an acclivity nearly 3 miles S.E. from Cupar-Fife. The parish is 8 miles long and from 1 to 4 in breadth, with 10,075 acres; the surface is hilly, but in general subject to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Cultra. Weaving linen fabrics employs some of the inhabitants of the parish. The old house of Stotstarvet, once the family residence of the Scots, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work entitled, "The Staggering State of the Scots' Statesman," is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds which bound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The parish church, which stands on an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. There are a United Presbyterian and a Free church in the village; and three public schools are situated respectively at Craigrothie, Bridgend and Ceres. Fairs are held on 24th of June and 20th of October. The nearest railway station is at Cupar. In 1891 the parish of Ceres contained a population of 1,677.

CREICH parish, situate 5 miles N.N.W. from Cupar (which is its post town), is about 3 miles in length and 2 in breadth, and embraces 2,941 acres; it is bounded on the north by Fife, on the south by Moonzie and Monimail, on the east by Balmerino and Kilmarny, and on the west by Abdie and Dunbog. Its surface is undulating, and the soil sandy and thin. There is a handsome parish church and school, also a Free church and school. On a little eminence near the church are the vestiges of a Roman camp, and at a short distance therefrom are the remains of a castle which formerly belonged to Cardinal Beaton. The parish was the birthplace of the Rev. John Sage, the first of the post-revolution bishops in the Scottish Episcopal communion, and the author of that very remarkable production, the "Fundamental Charter of Presbytery." The nearest railway station is at Cupar. Population in 1891, 825.

DAIRSIE is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is situated on the main road from Cupar to Dundee, 2½ miles N.E. from the former and 8 S. from the latter town; bounded on the north by Logie a.s.d. Kilmarny, on the south by Kemback, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Cupar, its post town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotteswood, who was the proprietor of the Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, was erected at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Dairsie Castle, now a ruin, is noted as the place where a parliament was called upon to assemble in the year 1385. The parish is nearly 3 miles in extent each way, and contains 2,555 acres; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land. There is a public school here. It is a station on the North British railway. Population in 1891, 606.

KEMBACK parish is nearly of a triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about 8½ miles in breadth and length. It is 3 miles E. from Cupar, its post town, and 2½ S. from Ceres. It is bounded on the north by Dairsie and Leuchars, on the east by St. Andrews and Ceres, on the south by Ceres, and on the west by Ceres and Cupar. It is one of the richest agricultural and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 2,594 acres more than 1,500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. There is a flax spinning mill in this parish. The church stands about 2 miles from Ceres village, and 3 from Cupar. There is also a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dairsie. Population in 1891, 794.

KILMANY is a parish and village, situated about 5 miles N. from Cupar, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Balmerino and Forgan, on the south by Logie and Cupar, on the east by Forgan, and on the west by Moonzie and Creich. The parish is irregular, its length being about 6 miles and its breadth varying from 1 to 8 miles, and embraces 5,343 acres. With the exception of a few acres which are chiefly woodland, the entire parish is in a high state of cultivation, being well watered and drained by means of numerous waterfalls and streams. There is a parish church and two public schools, also an United Presbyterian church at Rathillet. The nearest railway station is at Cupar. Population in 1891, 588.

LOGIE is a small parish, situated 6 miles N. N.E. from Cupar, its post town, bounded on the north by Forgan, on the south by Dairsie, on the east by Leuchars, and on the west by Kilmany. Its length is 4 miles, and its breadth about 1½, embracing 3,599 acres. The soil is of a rich fertile nature. There are a parish church, a Free church, and a public school. The nearest railway station is at Dairsie. Population in 1891, 369.

MONIMAIL is a parish and village, situated about 5 miles W. from Cupar. It is bounded on the north by Dunbog, Creich, and Moonzie, on the south by Cults and Colleslie, on the east by Cupar, and on the west by Abdie; its length is 6 miles and its breadth 4, and it embraces 6,554 acres. The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Celtic word Mon or Monath, a hill—the latter part signifying a mile or meal, or meile, a mid. The northern part consist of a fine range of hills, the highest of which is called Mount Hill. A monumental pillar to the late Earl of Hopetoun stands upon its summit. It is a plain Doric column, 92 feet in height, surmounted by a square capital of 15 feet. It is hollow within, and has a narrow spiral staircase by which there is an ascent to the top, whence a fine view of the valley of the Eden and the Firths of Forth and Tay is obtained. Fernie Castle is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed to have been one of Macduff's castles; it has evidently been a place of considerable strength. The greater portion of the parish is in a high state of cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish church is at Monimail; it is a handsome building, and contains nearly 600 sittings. There is also a Free church at the Bow of Fife, and two public schools in the parish. Population in 1891, 769.

MOONZIE is a small parish about 3 miles W. of Cupar, bounded on the north by Kilmany, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Cupar (its post town), and on the west by Creich. It is the smallest parish in the county, being only 2 miles long by 1½ broad, and contains 1,258 acres. The soil is excellent, and in a high state of cultivation. There is a parish church and school. The inhabitants are mainly connected with agriculture. The nearest railway station is Cupar. Population in 1891, 128.

BLEBO CRAIGS is a hamlet in the parish of Kemback. Dairsie is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant.

BOW OF FIFE is a hamlet in the parish of Monimail. Springfield is the nearest railway station, 3½ miles distant.

BRUNTON is a village in the parish of Creich. Cupar is the nearest railway station, 6 miles distant.

CRAIGROTHIE is a small village in the parish of Ceres. Cupar is the nearest railway station, 9 miles distant.

EASTER FERNIE is a hamlet in the parish of Monimail. Cupar is the nearest railway station, 3½ miles distant.

LETHAM is a village in the parish of Monimail. The nearest railway station is at Colleslie, 8 miles distant.

LUTHRIE is a village in the parish of Creich. Cupar is the nearest railway station, 5 miles distant.

PITTSOTTIE is a hamlet partly in the parish of Kemback, and partly in that of Ceres. The nearest railway station is at Cupar, 9 miles distant.

RATHLET is a village in the parish of Kilmany. The nearest railway station is at Cupar, 4½ miles distant.

SPRINGFIELD is a village and railway station in the parish of Cupar.

DUNFERMLINE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWNHILL, WELLWOOD, MILES MARK, CROSSGATES, KINGSEAT, AND LASSODIE.

DUNFERMLINE is a city and a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, the capital of its parish, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and one of the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county. Its ancient title of city is now revived. It is 16 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 47 N.E. from Glasgow, 31 S.W. from Cupar, 14 E. from Alloa, 21 S. by E. from Stirling, 15 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 6 N. from North Queensferry; situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Firth of Forth, and three hundred feet above the level at Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated, it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprises a fine marine view on the south; and its salubrious situation renders it one of the healthiest cities in Scotland. In 1057 Malcolm Canmore ascended the Scottish throne. Besides founding the monastery of Dunfermline, he built a strong tower on a height in the adjacent glen, and from this tower the town derives its name and dates its existence. Dun in Gaelic, signifies a hill or fort; far means crooked or winding; and lyn a pool and running water, which is exactly descriptive of the tower and locality. The arms of the town are a tower, supported by two lions, with the motto, "Esto Rupes, inaccessa."—"Be thou an invincible rock." A palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation; the south-west wall still remains, a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. For a long period a case was pending in the law courts between the Crown and the proprietor of the Pittencrieff lands as to the ground occupied by the palace ruins. In 1873 the dispute terminated in a decision of the House of Lords by which the ruins and a portion of the grounds adjoining were apportioned to the Crown. The ground has been duly boarded off, and the right of admission to it by the public is granted, while the Government for the time being allowed a sum to be inserted in the estimates for the repair of these interesting and historical ruins. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore, as before mentioned, for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I. It continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I., who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and in 1124 translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the Kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I., on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland. About the commencement of the sixteenth century all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; and these were demolished at the Reformation.

The city consists of streets stretching from east to west, with a number of smaller streets crossing down hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built; surveying the spires and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city. Within the last fifty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets but by the addition of a large suburb to the west and east, and during the last thirty years and more recently, the improvements effected have been considerable. There is a station here on the Dunfermline branch of the northern section of the North British railway, which affords direct communication with all parts of the country; whilst another line, about three miles in length, hence to Charlestown, is used principally in the conveyance of coal for shipment at that port. The West of Fife mineral railway runs from the town north into the rich mineral district, which contains immense quantities of coal, ironstone, limestone, &c. A line has been constructed between Dunfermline and Edinburgh by North Queensferry across the Forth by means of the Forth Bridge, which was finished in 1890, and opened by the Prince of Wales on March 4th of that year. Dunfermline Lower, a handsome new station, is now on the main line from Inverness and Perth to Edinburgh, and passengers from Dunfermline can now reach Edinburgh in less than half an hour. There is a spacious public park, situate at the east end of the town, extending to between 30 and 40 acres, which is finely laid out with trees, and has a handsome polished granite water fountain, given by the late Provost Donald. There is also a band stand with gilt dome, the gift of Mrs. Carnegie. It commands a fine view of Edinburgh on a clear day, as well as of the Firth of Forth for a great distance. The town is well supplied with water. The reservoirs at Craigluscar proving insufficient for the requirements of the town, the Corporation obtained an Act of Parliament in 1876 to ensure a more plentiful supply from Glensherrup, the works costing about £70,000. The streets are lighted with gas. There is a strong fire brigade in the city, who have quarters in Campbell street. Fire plugs on the gravitation principle are placed in numerous places throughout the streets and lanes. The sewage of the city is conveyed by means of pipes to the sea, the pipe tract beginning at Urquhart Farm and touching the coast at Charlestown, a distance of three miles. The plans were prepared by Mr. J. L. Stewart, C.E., Edinburgh, and the cost of the undertaking was about £7,000.

The most imposing public building is the Town House, at the bottom of High street. This handsome structure was begun in 1875 and finished in 1879, at a cost of about £20,000. It is built on the site of the Old Town House, and by its erection, Kirkgate, which was the narrowest and most dangerous thoroughfare in the town, has been greatly widened. The building, which presents a combination of the French and Scotch Gothic styles of architecture, is from a design by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh, and has two frontages, the one to Bridge street 66ft., and the other to Kirkgate 144ft. in length. At the north-east corner, and joining the two frontages, is the chief feature of the building—viz., a tower, which measures 23ft. square, and rises to an altitude of 150ft. There is a clock fixed in the tower, at an elevation of 105ft., with four illuminated dials, striking the hours on a powerfully-tuned bell, weighing 33 cwt. The keystone of the main entrance represents a dragon, the emblem of St. Margaret, and above this, on the east front of the tower, is an elaborate carving of the royal Scottish arms. On the Bridge street elevation is another carving of the burgh arms, also canopied busts representing Malcolm Canmore and Queen Margaret, with King Robert the Bruce and Elizabeth, his second queen, all of which royal personages are buried in the abbey. In the Kirkgate front are placed the eight carved stone panels from the old Town House—viz., the royal arms, the burgh arms, St. Margaret enshrined, the English rose, the Scotch thistle, the Irish harp, the French fleur-de-lys, and the sword and sceptre. Some of these are said to be from the old market cross of 1630. Other carved figures of a fanciful and grotesque character adorn the building, most of which, however, come more under the general designation of non-descript. The interior of the building includes a burgh court room and a council chamber, accommodation being also provided for the Town Clerk and other officials of the burgh. Perhaps the public buildings next in prominence to the Town House if we except the edifices for religious purposes, are the County buildings, standing on the south side of the High street, and constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire 132ft. in height rising over the front. They contain a sheriff court room, justice of peace court room, and a suite of rooms for the sheriff, sheriff's clerk's office, procurator fiscal's, and other county business. The Post Office is a handsome new building in Queen Anne street, built on the ground of the old High school. By a gift of £5,000 generously offered by

Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of New York, a native of Dunfermline, the Carnegie Public Baths were founded in 1875. They are very commodious, and the building, which is situated in Bath street, is from a neat and elegant design prepared by Mr. Andrew Scobie, Dunfermline. The above gift was followed by another munificent donation of £8,000 by the same gentleman, for the erection of a free library. The building is at the corner of St. Margaret and Abbott streets, and is named the Carnegie Free Library. The style of architecture may be designated domestic Tudor, and is from plans prepared by Mr. J. C. Walker, Edinburgh. The tympanum of the doorway contains a bas-relief of the sun in splendour, with the inscription "Let there be Light." The interior arrangements have been well planned, and consist of library room, reading rooms for ladies and gentlemen, recreation and smoke rooms, lavatories, and dwelling house for the librarian. The memorial stone was laid July 27th, 1881, and was opened by the Earl of Rosebery August 29th, 1883. The library contains over 13,000 volumes. Altogether the design exhibits much skill and taste, and is an important acquisition to the town in an architectural as well as an intellectual point of view. In St. Margaret street, and on the site immediately south of the Carnegie Free Library, is St. Margaret's Hall. This building was begun in 1876, and completed in 1878, at a cost of about £12,000, from plans prepared by Mr. Scarforth, Edinburgh. The style of architecture is an adaptation of early English. The building contains a large hall capable of seating 1,500 persons, in which theatrical representations are occasionally given; a lecture hall capable of seating 350 person, billiard room, a reading room, and several committee and board rooms. In the large hall there is a splendid organ, which was purchased and presented to the directors of the Hall Company by the ladies of the town and district, the money being raised at a bazaar held in the building in April, 1878. The instrument cost over £1,800, and derives its blowing power from an ingenious hydraulic engine. The building belongs to the St. Margaret's Hall Company, Limited. The music hall, in Guildhall street, is a large modern erection, used for all kinds of public meetings. The upper hall is a room of 90 feet in length, 50 feet in width, and 45 feet in height. The other public buildings comprise the prison, the poorhouse, and hospital, all of which occupy sites at the eastern extremity of the town.

The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, was held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here for nearly two centuries, and became royal by a charter from James VI. dated 24th May, 1588. In this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations, and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th of October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce in favour of the aldermen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of courts, &c., "reserving, however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office. In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, four bailies, and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain, a town clerk, and fifteen councillors, elected pursuant to the terms of the Municipal Reform Act. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, and Queensferry (called the Stirling burghs), in sending one member to Parliament, the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman being the present representative. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of the sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife, who holds a regular court on the first and third Tuesday of every month during session, when there is always a considerable amount of business to be done in the way of civil actions. Burgh courts are held daily in the Corporation buildings. There are three newspapers, namely, the Dunfermline Press and the Dunfermline Journal, published on Saturday, and the Dunfermline Citizen, published on Wednesday.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be entirely ascribed to its manufacture of table linens and damask goods. This branch of industry took its root in the town about the commencement of last century. The cloth is woven of all dimensions, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain, many firms being engaged in this business. There are several large factories where powerloom weaving is carried on. It is said that the chest of the Incorporation of Weavers contains two curious specimens of their art; a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis, and a woman's shift by another named Meldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of the needle; the only part which Inglis could not accomplish was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance, among which may be mentioned the large fire-clay works of Messrs. J. & M. Craig, at Lilliehill; Richard Street and Sons, at Townhill; Loch-Head Fire Clay Co., Loch-Head; and the Fife Coal Co., Limited, at Crossgates, where every description of articles usually made from that material is manufactured. There are also iron and brass foundries, engineering works, dye works and tobacco manufactories. The coal trade in the neighbourhood is also very extensive, and large quantities of this article are annually exported. About 4,000 men are employed, and the condition of the collier has been much improved in recent years. Five branch banks are established here, in addition to a Savings Bank, for which a fine building has been erected in East Port street, at a cost of £3,000. The board of directors include the Provost, bailies, and clergymen of the town. The principal hotels are the City Arms, in Bridge street; The Royal, in High street; and the St. Margaret's, in St. Margaret street; besides several other houses for public accommodation of lesser note. In the town are bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies, horticultural societies, and various charitable associations.

The parish church has been collegiate and under the care of two ministers since 1645. Of the other places of worship, their situations and the respective officiating clergymen will be found under a list in a distinctive head in a succeeding page. The Secession church (now the United Presbyterian) which has extended over the greater part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history, the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the Establishment in 1738, and shortly after founded Queen

Anne street church here, which, it is believed, was the first of second of that denomination. The most elegant building here of modern erection is the Abbey church. It is of ornamental Gothic architecture, surmounted by a massive tower one hundred feet high, having the words "King Robert the Bruce" in massive stone letters four feet high round the four sides at the summit of the tower. The interior of the church is much admired. While excavating the foundation, the workmen discovered the tomb of that celebrated monarch, 490 years after his death; his remains were collected and enclosed in a leaden coffin, and are interred under the tower. Adjoining the new is part of the old abbey church, where many other Scottish monarchs and nobles lie buried. Amongst other gifts to the town, Mr. Andrew Carnegie also caused to be placed in the abbey a handsome memorial window, from the design of Sir Noel Paton, the ceremony of unveiling which was performed in June, 1884. The town and neighbourhood support many friendly societies. The grammar school was instituted towards the end of the fifteenth century. In 1873 the school was, by the operation of "The Education (Scotland) Act, 1872," transferred to and placed under the management of the burgh School Board, the interest of the original sum of £2,000, which belonged to the school being made over annually to that body. In 1877 the Board, with the approval of the Board of Education, resolved to exclude elementary instruction from the curriculum, and to elevate the school into one for an efficient aid to higher or secondary education. The building formerly occupied in Queen Anne street proving unsuitable for teaching purposes, a spacious and handsome edifice, with every modern improvement, was erected in Buchanan street at a cost of £7,500, and the school was transferred to the new building in January, 1886. The Board have also erected a school in the west end of the town at a cost of £4,186. Since then a central school has been substituted for the Rolland and Commercial schools, at a cost of £5,143. This school was burnt down in 1891, and has been re-built with considerable extensions and improvements. There is also a school which was erected in connection with St. Leonard's steam power weaving factory, purchased at a cost of £1,200. Altogether there are seven schools under the control of the Board, while a supervision is exercised over three other educational institutions. The market is held on Tuesday for grain, which is disposed of by stock and sample. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in January, March, April, June, July, September, October and November. The entire parish of Dunfermline comprises 20,764 statute acres, and by the returns made to Government in 1881 contained a population of 26,568, and by those for 1891, 28,651, of which 22,865 belonged to the Royal burgh, and 19,742 to the Parliamentary burgh.

CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWNHILL, WELLWOOD, KINGSEAT, and MILES MARK are small villages and hamlets in the parish, from one to three miles distant from Dunfermline. At Halbeath are the colliery and offices of Wallace Brothers, and a Board school. At Townhill are the collieries and offices of the Townhill Coal Company, and a Board school. At Wellwood are the collieries and offices of Messrs. Thomas Spowart and Co. Limited, and a school. At Miles Mark a school has been built by the joint aid of the parish and burgh School Boards, at a cost of £3,000; it will accommodate 400 children. Population in 1891: Crossford, 511; Halbeath, 1,024; Townhill, 1,950; Wellwood, 722; Kingseat, 735; and Miles Park and Park Nook, 682.

CROSSGATES is a village partly in the parish of Dalgetty and partly in that of and 4 miles E.N.E. from Dunfermline, and 4 N. from Inverkeithing, situated about a quarter of a mile from a station on the North British Railway. The inhabitants are principally employed in the collieries surrounding the village. The places of worship are an Established and United Presbyterian churches, and there is likewise a Board school. Population in 1881, 1,057, and in 1891, 1,106.

LASSODIE is a colliery village in the parish of Beath, $\frac{4}{5}$ miles distant from Dunfermline, its post town. A Free church and a public school are the principal buildings here. Population in 1881, 808.

DYSART

IS a town and parish, and a royal and parliamentary burgh, and a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British Railway, bounded on the north by Kinross, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Wemyss and Markinch, and on the west by Kirkcaldy. Its length is about 3 miles and its breadth 2 miles, and it embraces 4,197 acres. The town is situated 2 miles N.W. from Kirkcaldy, on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. The central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearance. The streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1813. So early as 1546 Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt. The alteration in commerce, consequent on the Union of 1707, destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has also been annihilated. The trade in now enjoys is considerable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar linen fabrics, also woollens, tweeds, druggets, and wineys. There are large power-loom factories in the burgh, besides two flax spinning mills, and in the vicinity are mines of coal, extensively wrought. The harbour is very good, and there is an excellent wet dock, with about eighteen feet of water. Coal is the principal export. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors—in all nine; and joins with Kirkcaldy, Kinghorn, and Burntisland, in returning one member to Parliament. The Normand Memorial Hall, a very handsome stone structure, was erected at a cost of between £5,000 and £6,000, and presented to the town by Mrs. James Normand, in memory of her deceased husband.

The places of worship are the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and in the town are also parochial and infants' schools, and a Mechanics' Institute. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravenscraig, standing on a steep crag fronting the sea; this castle is alluded to in Sir Walter Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," under the name of Ravenshugh. It was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assaulted by a party of his troops. It has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. Dysart House, the seat of the Earl of Rosslyn, is situated in the midst of extensive and beautifully laid out grounds. In 1891 the parish contained a population of 13,626 persons.

SECTION OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

FALKLAND AND FREUCHIE.

FALKLAND, a parish, and small ancient town of its name, a royal burgh, is 25 miles N. from Edinburgh, 23 miles S.S.W. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Perth, the same distance N.W. from Kinghorn, 10 S.W. from Cupar, 8 S. from Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and the same distance from the Falkland Road station of the North British Railway. It is bounded on the north by Auchtermuchty, on the south by Markinch, on the east by Kettle, and on the west by Strathmiglo; its length is about 6 miles and its breadth about 4, and is situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from the winds of the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, somewhat in keeping with the architecture of the palace, a building well worthy the notice of a stranger. For a long time it was only a ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of Newhall. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Scotland resided here occasionally up to the time of Charles I., who called here on his return from the continent in 1650. James V. died here in 1542. A dinner is shown in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the wall of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk from her breast by means of an oaten reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1615, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, until at length he retired with great booty. The town was erected into a burgh by James II. in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by James VI. in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) "to obviate the damage and inconveniences sustained, for want of innkeepers and victuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles and others of their subjects who come to their country seats." The magistracy consists of a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nine councillors. A town hall was erected in 1804, in which balls and other public assemblages take place. A large common, which belongs to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c., was some years ago divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The House of Falkland, erected by the late Mr. Bruce, is one of the finest mansions in the county; the grounds are very tastefully laid out, and are annually resorted to by large numbers of visitors, who find it a very excellent place for pic-nics, &c. The house and estates are now the property of the Marquis of Bute. The manufacture of linen forms an important branch of trade here, and the chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone, the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1,650 feet above the level of the sea, and appears to have been fortified. The western Lomond is higher, and has on its top a large cairn, or heap of loose stones.

The places of worship are a parish church, a Free church, and a chapel for Independents. The parish church was erected through the liberality of the late O. T. Bruce, Esq., at an expense, it is said, of £7,000. It is a fine structure, surmounted by an elegant spire; and to perpetuate the memory of this gentleman, a monument has been erected on Nett Hill, near the Lomonds, which can be seen at a great distance. A very neat foundation was likewise constructed in the centre of the town by the above gentleman, who did much to contribute to the welfare and improvement of this place. A very handsome memorial has been erected in the square behind the palace by the executors of the late Mrs. Bruce, to the memory of her father, Colonel Robert Bruce, and her uncle, John Bruce, from whom she inherited the estates of Newhall, Falkland Wood, and Grangehill, near Kinghorn. The parish school has been very considerably enlarged and improved by the School Board since the passing of the Act. Fairs were formerly held in the parish on the second Tuesday in January, third Thursday in March, second Monday in May, third Friday in June, first Thursday in August, last Tuesday in September, and Friday before Edinburgh Hallow fair in November; but since railways become general throughout the country, these fairs have fallen into disuse. Falkland road is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant. The parish of Falkland embraces 8,265 acres, and in 1891 contained a population of 2,470 persons, of whom 959 were in the royal burgh.

NEWTON OF FALKLAND is a hamlet about midway between Falkland and Freuchie, where there is an extensive trade carried on in brewing. Falkland road is the nearest railway station, 2½ miles distant.

FREUCHIE is a village, in the parish of and about two miles E. from Falkland. The manufacture of linen is carried on here to a considerable extent, the inhabitants being principally employed in weaving linen goods. A United Presbyterian and a quoad sacra church are in the village. There is also a public school. Falkland road is the nearest railway station, 2 miles distant. Population in 1891, 981.

INVERKEITHING,

WITH THE PARISH OF DALGETTY, AND THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF NORTH QUEENSFERRY, ST' DAVID'S, FORDELL, HILLEND, JAMES TOWN, AND ROSYTH.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh, a seaport, and the capital of its parish; 11 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 30 s. from Perth, 13 s.w. from Kirkcaldy, and 4 s.e. from Dunfermline. It is most agreeably situated at the inner side of a bay of the Firth of Forth, on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about 2 miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c., and on a railway from Edinburgh to Dunfermline, via Queensferry. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picture-que in the scenery of Mid-Lothian; Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and fine buildings, lofty spires and towering monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs, while the passing and re-passing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I., Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received a charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are co-eval with the earliest periods of Scottish history. Among these is the "Inns," or old Palace, which is said to have been the residence of Annabella Drummond, Queen of Robert III., who died at Inverkeithing. This Queen is supposed to have presented the burgh with its Cross, on the occasion of the marriage of her son, the Duke of Rothesay, with the daughter of the Earl of Douglas, in 1398. The top of the cross is covered by shields charged with the royal arms of that Queen and the Earl of Douglas. The beautiful font in the parish church, which is believed to be one of the finest in Scotland, is also said to have been the gift of this royal personage. In 1806, when the church was undergoing a series of repairs, the font was disinterred from the rubbish which had covered it for centuries. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still retains the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth. The rock on which it stands is connected with the mainland by a causeway, and a stone slab, placed in the wall over what appears to have been the principal entrance, bears the date of 1561. In Sir Walter Scott's novel of "The Abbot," this castle is alluded to, and tradition points it out as being the birthplace of the wife of Oliver Cromwell. It is now the property of the Earl of Hopetoun, whose noble mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in stately magnificence, and the other a mighty skeleton. The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are lighted by gas; improvements generally have been made, and the thoroughfares display some excellent and well furnished shops. There is a town house, which comprises a gaol and suitable apartments for the courts. The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming charters of earlier but unknown dates; a number of intervening charters were confirmed by one from James VI., in 1598. The government is vested in a provost, or sheriff, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, elected by the councillors. The expense of paving, lighting and cleansing is defrayed from the Corporation funds. The burgh, in conjunction with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross and South Queensferry, sends one member to the Imperial Parliament. Besides the usual trades found in a respectable country town there are fire-clay works, tanning, rope making and ship-building; connected with the latter branch is a patent ship, of great use in repairing vessels. Freestone and whinstone are abundant in this neighbourhood, and of excellent quality, and considerable quantities of each are annually exported. The harbour is capacious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds. The private harbour of East Ness affords additional accommodation, and gives about 18 feet of water at spring tides. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, a new building completed in August, 1891, at a cost of £2,000, is established here. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and one for a United Presbyterian congregation. There is a large public school under the School Board. A fair is held on the first Friday in August. The entire parish of Inverkeithing, the area of which is 4,182 acres, contained in 1891 a population of 2,881; of this number the town had 1,663 HILLEND, JAMES TOWN AND ROSYTH are hamlets in the parish of Inverkeithing. At the latter place are the ruins of Rosyth Castle. A Board school for Dalgetty is situated at the eastern part of Hillend.

NORTH QUEENSFERRY, in the parish of Inverkeithing, is 2 miles s. from Inverkeithing, and is well known to travellers as the port and point of land opposite to Queensferry (or South Queensferry), in Linlithgowshire, and a steamer passes between the two several times daily. The celebrated Forth bridge, for carrying the North British railway over the Firth of Forth, forms a connection at this place. It was opened by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, on the 4th of March, 1890, the cost of its erection being about £3,000,000. It is said to exceed in grandeur anything as yet attempted by the engineer. Two of the spans of this gigantic and striking are 1,780 feet each in length, and have a height of 150 feet above high water at spring tides. There are two other spans of 675 feet, fourteen of 168 feet, and six of 50 feet each. The total length with the viaduct approaches is a mile and a half. This magnificent structure, designed by Messrs. Fowler & Baker, is said to eclipse the largest bridge ever yet built. By its erection the direct journey north can be taken without break as formerly, when passengers had to cross the Forth by ferry from Granton to Burntisland. A short distance to the west of the village is the anchorage ground, resorted to by vessels in stress of weather or contrary winds, called "Saint Margaret's Hope." Here is a station of the coast-guard, and it is a fishing one for a kind of sprat, of which prodigious quantities are taken. There are large whinstone quarries, employing a number of men. Population in 1891, 489.
DALGETTY is a parish 5 miles in length, and from 1 to 3½ in breadth, and covers an area of 3,340 acres. It is bounded on the north by Dunfermline, on the east by Aberdeen, on the south by the Forth, and on the west by Inverkeithing. The surrounding district is rich in coal of which great quantities are exported from St. David's. In this parish are the ruins of Fordell Castle (erected in 1111), with its beautiful grounds and waterfall, well worthy of notice from the tourist; also Donibristle, the seat of the Earl of Moray, beautifully situated on the Firth of Forth, commanding a splendid sea view. Its park is one of the finest in Scotland. There are two public schools in the parish. Population of the parish in 1891, 1,321.

SAINT DAVID'S is a small port in the parish of Dalgetty, and about a mile and a half to the east of Inverkeithing. The rise of this place can be mainly ascribed to the advantages it affords for the shipment of coal, brought from the extensive collieries at Fordell by means of a private railway five miles in length. At the pier here, which has been extended at a cost of from £4,000 to £5,000, upwards of 500 tons of coal can be shipped daily; and there is an average depth of eighteen feet at high water—being greater than that of any other port on this part of the coast, admitting vessels of upwards of six hundred tons to receive their cargoes at the pier. The nearest railway station is Inverkeithing, a mile and a half distant.

FORDELL is a village chiefly inhabited by miners, in the parish of Dalgetty, about a mile south-east of Crossgates, its postal district, on the property of the late George William Mercer Henderson, Esq. It has a fine reading room, which has been provided for the use of the workmen. Crossgates is the nearest railway station, a mile distant. Population in 1891, 490.

KETTLE AND LADYBANK,

WITH CULTS, COLLESSIE AND PITLESSIE.

KETTLE is a parish and village, about 8 miles in length and 3 in breadth, and embracing 7,612 acres, the latter 17 miles from Dundee, 4 m. from Falkland, and about 1 s. from Ladybank, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Edinburgh to Cupar, nearly 6 miles s.w. from the latter town. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British Railway passes through the village, at which there is a station. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Catul, or Katul, and in common parlance it is invariably entitled "the Kettle." At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the Crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife; it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of the northern side. The manufacture of linen is the principal trade carried on here. The church, which is a neat edifice with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the established church, there is an United Presbyterian church. A large public school was erected in 1866, at a cost of about £3,000. King's Kettle railway station is in the village. In this parish about half a mile from the village is the hamlet of BALMALCOLM, where there is a Free Church. In 1881 the population of Kettle parish was 2,054, and in 1891, 1,999.

CULTS is a parish 2½ miles in length and 1½ in breadth, and embraces 2,924 acres, situated about 3 miles E. from Ladybank, its post town, 2 N.E. from Kettle, and 6 s. from Cupar. The parish is chiefly in the Howe of Fife, on the south banks of the river Eden, having Ceres on the east, Kettle on the west, Monimail on the north, and Seconie and Kenoway on the south. It abounds in coal, lime, and freestone, and is generally well cultivated and enclosed. The principal ornaments of this district are the mansion house and beautifully disposed grounds and plantations of Crawford Priory, on the north side of the road to Cupar. Wilkie, the celebrated painter, was a native of the parish, his father having been minister of Cults. The ancient name of the parish was Guthies, which signifies a nook, or corner, it being disjunct from the large strath which runs from east to west along the banks of the Eden. Population in 1881, 704, and in 1891, 700.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults, 2 miles N.E. from Kettle, situated on the road between Kirkcaldy and Cupar, 4 miles s.w. from the latter town, and about 2 e. from Ladybank, its post town. The occupation of the inhabitants is of the same nature as that of those of Kettle. There is a public school here which serves for the whole of the parish. The railway stations of Kettle, Ladybank, and Collesie are each about 2 miles distant.

COLLESSIE, a Gaelic word signifying bottom of a glen, is a parish lying to the north of that of Kettle, 4 miles N.W. therefrom, and 3 N.W. from Ladybank, its post town. It is 8 miles in length by 5 in breadth, and is bounded on the north by Abdie, on the south by Kettle, on the west by Auchtermuchty, and on the east by Monimail, consisting chiefly of fine enclosed lands and some fine plantations rising from the Eden to the hills on the north. The village, of no importance in the way of business, is situated 3 miles from Auchtermuchty and 6 from Cupar, near to two roads which cross each other, the one leading from Newburgh to Kirkcaldy, the other from Cupar to Kinnross. The railway before mentioned passes through it. The parish church is a neat building, surmounted by a spire. There is also a public school here. The railway stations are Collesie and Ladybank, on the Perth branch of the North British railway. Acreage, 8,699. Population in 1881, 1,980, and in 1891, 2,075.

LADYBANK is a village in the above parish, and is of great importance, being a junction station of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British railway, also the post town for this part of the county. The chief business is linen manufacturing, but malting is likewise carried on. A Free church, with spire, was erected here in 1876, and a quoad sacra church has also been built. There is also a public school. Population in 1891, 1,286.

KILCONQUHAR,

WITH BARNYARDS, EARLSFERRY, COLINSBURGH, AND ELIE.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR extends in an oblong form between 6 and 7 miles from north to south, and varying from 2 to nearly 5 miles in breadth. It is bounded on the north by Ceres and Cameron, and south by Elie, on the east by Carnbee, and on the west by Newburn and Largo. Until the 15th May, 1893, the royal burgh of Earlsferry was in Kilconquhar parish. The Boundary Commissioners then transferred a detached portion of Elie parish (consisting of Muircambus and part of Charlston estates) to Kilconquhar, and in exchange gave to Elie parish all the land formerly belonging to Kilconquhar to the south of Cockle Mill Burn and the North British railway. This area included the burgh of Earlsferry, which now forms part of Elie parish; the East of Fife branch of the North British railway passes about half a mile west of the village. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast; the flat part of the south is sandy, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarres, the residence of the Right Hon. the Earl of Crawford; Kilconquhar House, the residence of the Right Hon. Earl of Lindsay; Charlton House, the residence of Colonel John A. Thomson; Lathallan, the residence of Colonel F. J. Outwaite, are the most deserving of notice. Kilconquhar Loch is a fine sheet of water, three-quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour many swans and wild fowls. The parish contains four villages, namely KILCONQUHAR, BARNYARDS, COLINSBURGH, and LARGOWARD. The entire parish of Kilconquhar comprises an area of 1,105 statute acres, and had a population in 1881 of 2,053, and in 1891, 2,046.

COLINSBURGH is a village of some trade, situate one mile from Kilconquhar, having a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, a good inn, a post and telegraph office, and several well-furnished shops. It was originally built by Colin, third earl of Balcarres, who died in 1723, and it is named after him. Besides the parish church at Kilconquhar there is a United Presbyterian church at Colinsburgh, and a Board school. In the village a weekly corn market is held on Thursday. The nearest railway station is Kilconquhar, one mile and a half distant. Population returned with Kilconquhar.

ELIE is a small parish, containing the village of its own name, and until recently the royal burgh of Earlsferry. It is bounded on the north by Kilconquhar, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by St. Monance, and on the west by Largo and Newburn. Its length is about two miles, and breadth one mile, and it has an area of 2,136 acres. The whole, which is enclosed, is the property of William Baird, Esq., whose elegant residence, Elie House, is situated a little to the north of the village. The grounds are beautifully wooded, and are laid out with great taste, and deserve notice. The village of Elie is at the head of Elie bay, 6 miles E. from Largo, one mile and a half S.E. from Kilconquhar, 2½ miles S. from Colinsburgh, and the same distance S.W. from St. Monance. It is a station on the East of Fife branch of the North British railway, which passes a little north of the village, which stands so near the sea that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The beach is here very fine and sandy, and on one portion of it a species of garnet is found. Many persons resort here in the summer from distant parts to enjoy the bathing, which is excellent; another great source of attraction to visitors being the golfing links at Earlsferry. An elegant club house has been built, and the links are largely frequented by players from all quarters. At some earlier period the village must have been a place of more importance than it is now, for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and an Independent chapel. A commodious Board school and master's residence are situated north of the town. The trade of the place is confined to the export of grain and potatoes; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch here. Population in 1881, 670, and in 1891, 764; population of Elie parish, including Earlsferry, 1,172.

EARLSFERRY, a royal burgh, is now included in the parish of Elie. It is on the sea coast, and lies 1 mile and a half S. from Kilconquhar, 3 S. from Colinsburgh, and adjoins the village of Elie. The date of its erection into a royal burgh is uncertain, as its earliest charter was destroyed by a fire in Edinburgh. A new one was in consequence granted by James IV., by which all its ancient privileges were renewed and confirmed. It is governed by a chief magistrate, a bailie, a treasurer, and six councillors. The nearest railway station is Elie, a mile distant. Population in 1881, 286, and in 1891, 304.

Is a town of considerable antiquity, and a Royal burgh and parish, 11½ miles N. from Edinburgh across the Forth, 3 s. from Kirkcaldy, and 2½ N.E. from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Firth of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith, and on the Edinburgh and Aberdeen branch of the North British Railway. There are two principal streets in the town, one running from east to west and the other from south to north. An elegant edifice answers the purpose of a town house. Another public erection worthy of notice is a handsome school house; it contains school rooms and a library and museum. There is also a branch of the British Linen Company Bank established here. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I., and about that time was said to have been a royal residence. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, returns one member to Parliament, the present member being J. H. Dalziel, Esq. All around the country is fine, with a pleasant outlook to the sea, and distant view of the south coast beyond the Forth. The branches of trade carried on here are ship building, candle making, and the manufacture of glue. The harbour has fallen to decay, and the nearest now is about half a mile distant, at Petty-Cur, which for many years was the ferry place for Edinburgh, now transferred to Burntisland. In 1887 the municipal authorities purchased on behalf of the community Links park adjoining the town, for public and recreation grounds. The cost of the ground was £1,050, and about £200 additional has been expended in laying out the golf course, bowling green and tennis court. It is greatly frequented by lovers of the game of golf, for which purpose it is considered to be one of the best courses in the county.

The island of INCKEITH, which forms part of the parish of Kinghorn, distant about three miles from Petty-Cur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a lighthouse, with a revolving light, on the highest point of an island standing 235 feet above the sea level. Certain writers say Incketh was so called from an old noble family, named Keith, while others go farther back into the mists of antiquity and connect it with Gaid. Here, it is supposed, was raised the town or fortress of Guida, described by Bede, more than eleven hundred years ago, as situated in the middle of the great arm of the sea which runs into Britain from the east. About the year 700 a church or monastery, founded by St. Adamnan, successor to St. Columba, in the abbey of Iona, was erected on the island. Incketh was seized by the English in 1547, and a fort was built on it, which was taken by the French during the reign of Mary, queen of James V. A curious experiment was tried on Incketh by James IV. In order to discover the natural and original language of the human race, he sent two infants under the charge of a dumb woman to reside there until the children should arrive at maturity. No authentic record has been handed down to us, but it has been said that they spoke good Hebrew when they grew up. About a mile to the eastward of Kinghorn is the Kirkcaldy Combination Poorhouse for the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn; it occupies a commanding situation near the coast. Further particulars will be found in the account of Kirkcaldy. We may also state for the curious, that this poorhouse was the first institution of the kind assessed for the poor rates in Scotland. The case arose in consequence of the other three parishes refusing to pay the rates assessed by the parishes of Kinghorn, and after being brought before the Lord Ordinary, was, upon appeal, carried to the second division of the court of session, and a decree given in favour of Kinghorn, the expenses in the case, amounting to nearly £900, being defrayed by the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, and Burntisland. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church. There are also commodious public schools situated in the centre of the town. The entire parish of Kinghorn contains an acreage of 5,214, and in 1881 possessed a population of 2,789, of which number 2,025 were returned for the town.

About one mile from Kinghorn, on the Burntisland road, was unveiled with some ceremony on July 19th, 1887, by the Earl of Elgin, Lord Lieutenant of the county, a very handsome monument in the form of a Celtic Cross, to commemorate the memory of Alexander III., who met his death by falling from his horse in 1286. This monument was raised by public subscription, among the subscribers being H.M. the Queen. The inscription reads—"To the illustrious Alexander III., the last of Scotland's Celtic Kings, who was accidentally killed near this spot, March 19th, MCCLXXXVI. Erected on the Sex-centenary of his death."

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY, ON THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Station, High st—James Newlands, station master

KIRKCALDY,

WITH ABBOTSHALL, AUCHTERTOOL, CHAPEL, PATHHEAD, SINCLAIRTOWN, AND GALLATOWN.

KIRKCALDY is a royal burgh of very ancient date, the seat of a prebtery, a seaport, and the capital of its parish, 14 miles N. from Edinburgh, 38 S.W. from Dundee, and 6 N.E. from Burntisland (all rail distances), on the North British railway (Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee line), the station of which is contiguous to the town. It is situated on the northern shores of the Firth of Forth, and stretches along the base of a range of rising ground to the extent of upwards of 3 miles. By an Act of Parliament the suburbs of Abbotshall, Pathhead, Gallatown, and Sinclairtown, are included in the boundaries of the burgh, the new boundary line thus including portions of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Kinghorn and Dysart, and the quoad sacra parishes of St James, Inveriel and Pathhead. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which it stands, the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated the town most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled "the lang toon o' Kirkcaldy," in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few narrow diverging lanes, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises many well-built cross streets and detached dwellings, the residence of the opulent classes; so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears enveloped by finely enclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith (the residence of Ronald C. M. Ferguson, Esq., M.P.), and the grounds surrounding the elegant mansion of Dunnikier, the seat of James T. Oswald, Esq. The prospect from the heights is of a different, but equally delightful character embracing as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Firth of Forth. From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I. erected it an in into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but in 1673 the number of vessels in its possession had decreased considerably. On the return of peace in 1763, the trade of the port revived, and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels; from this period Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. The principal importations are flax, timber, grain, &c.; the exports are floor cloth, linoleum, linen, yarn, machinery and coal. The number of vessels belonging to the port has for some years been on the decline. Vessels from this port were employed in the Davis Straits whale fishery for many years, but this trade is now discontinued. A branch from the main line of railway traverses the entire length of the harbour—a great convenience to operations of loading and unloading vessels. The harbour, which has been greatly improved, is almost dry at low water, but at full tide is capable of admitting vessels of large burden. A new harbour at Seafield, two miles west of the town, was in course of construction this year (1892) by the Caledonian Railway Co., but owing to the bill being thrown out the works were stopped, and the harbour, which was in an advanced state, abandoned; the North British Railway Company, who opposed the bill, having paid over £90,000 as compensation. A scheme is now on foot to construct a harbour at the east end of the town, adjoining the old one, the east wall of which will form the west wall of the new dock, and will extend to Ravensraig Castle. The site has been inspected and plans submitted. The works are to cost about £300,000, of which the North British Railway Co. are to contribute one-half, providing the remainder is obtained by the Commissioners. As the present harbour accommodation is insufficient it is expected that the money will be forthcoming, in which case operations will at once be commenced. The custom house, having control over a considerable line of coast, extending from Aberdour to Anstruther, has been removed to Burntisland. The prominent trade of Kirkcaldy and neighbourhood bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax, tow, jute, and the weaving of linen goods for home and foreign consumption; striped hollands, dowlas, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c. are amongst the fabrics produced, and in the manufacture of which there are several extensive power-loom factories in full operation; there are also several bleaching fields and dye-works, and four china and earthenware manufactories, where a superior class of goods is made. Kirkcaldy is now the centre of the floor cloth and linoleum manufacture of the kingdom. The other branches include brass and iron founding, machine making, and a considerable corn, malt and meal trade. The general commerce of the place is assisted by branches of five banking establishments, namely, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited (who have also each a branch at Sinclairtown), the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company. There is also a branch of the Kirkcaldy Savings Bank. There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods, and there is a good hotel. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas. The celebrated Adam Smith, author of "The Wealth of Nations," was born here in the year 1723, to whose memory it has recently been proposed to erect a monument.

The civic government of the town is vested in a town council consisting of thirty-four members, of whom one is provost and admiral of the burgh and harbour, four bailies, one dean of guild, and one treasurer. The council are also commissioners of police under the General Police Act, and local authority under the Health Act. The management of the harbour is vested in a board of commissioners, fourteen in number, consisting of the provost and bailies and others. The burgh is conjoined with Kinghorn, Dysart and Burntisland in sending one member to Parliament, the present representative being Jas. H. Dalziel, Esq. In 1829 a handsome building of large dimensions was completed to supersede the old town house. It contains a hall for burgh and district meetings, a burgh court and record room, an office for the town clerk, and other apartments. The sheriff holds a court every Wednesday for the disposal of ordinary debts recovery, and small debt cases, and for this court new buildings are now (1893) being erected in Whyte's causeway. The justices of the peace likewise sit, when required, for adjudicating claims under other pecuniary acts. A Cru Exchanging is situated in Cowan street, the first stone of which was laid with masonic honours in May, 1889. The combination poorhouse is a conspicuous building, beautifully situated on the lands of Abden, in the parish of Kinghorn, commanding an extensive view of the Firth of Forth. It was erected in 1849, is capable of accommodating 150 inmates, and was opened for their reception in May, 1850. The total cost considerably exceeded £5,000. It is the joint property of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn, nearly half being held by the parish of Kirkcaldy.

The parish church of Kirkcaldy, which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are the parish churches of Inveriel, Abbotshall, St. James, and Pathhead, six Free churches, three United Presbyterian churches, one Episcopalian, one Independent, three Baptist, one Wesleyan, and one Roman Catholic chapel. The principal educational establishments consist of three handsome schools erected by the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Kirkcaldy, at a cost of about £16,000, and capable of containing upwards of 1,700 pupils; the old burgh school of Kirkcaldy having room for upwards of 400 pupils (this school includes a division for teaching the higher branches of education under a rector and two assistants); and three schools under the charge of the School Board of the parliamentary burgh of Dysart, capable of accommodating about 900 pupils. Until recently there were three schools which were established under the will of the late Robert Philp, Esq., of Edenshead, for instructing children of both sexes selected from amongst the poorest inhabitants, affording accommodation for 600 pupils. The property bequeathed by this gentleman for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. The pupils were admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and were taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum was allowed for clothing each pupil. These schools have been done away with, and arrangements made with the School Board by which children entitled to this benefaction are educated at the Board schools, and receive clothing as before—free. There is also a charitable trust by John Thomson, for educating poor children, and for annuities for the support of poor inhabitants. There are also private seminaries for the education of young ladies. Four newspapers are issued from the press of this town. The market, which is a stock market for the sale of grain is held on Saturday. The parish of Kirkcaldy embraces an area of 1,177 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 8,523; the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 15,055. The numbers for 1891 were: for the parish, 9,990, and for the burgh, 17,971. The population of the extended burgh of Kirkcaldy in 1891 was 27,152.

ABBOTSHALL, although a distinct parish, is now included in the burgh of Kirkcaldy, as before mentioned. Its principal street, called Links street (nearly a mile long), runs west in a direct line with the High street of the town named. The trade and manufactures are of the same character as those of Kirkcaldy; and more immediately in Abbotshall are dye works, an earthenware manufactory, and a large corn mill. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and there are Board schools. The general appearance of the parish, the extent of which is about 2 miles either way, is very agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward, into tolerably high grounds. Raith House, before noticed, and also the small village of CHAPEL are in this parish. Acreage, 4,135. Population included in Kirkcaldy returns.

PATHHEAD, now included in the burgh as before noticed, is situated chiefly on the face of a hill, looking towards the Firth of Forth, and is joined by two other districts, respectively named GALLATOWN and SINCLAIRTOWN, also in the same burgh. The manufacture of linen goods is briskly followed in these places. Dowlas, ticks, sheeting, &c. of excellent quality are produced both by hand and power; there flax spinning is also carried on to some extent. At Sinclairtown are three earthenware manufactories; and at Pathhead is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also one of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are an Established church, two Free churches, and a meeting house for Baptists. The means of education are not wanting, a Board school having been erected in Smeaton road; and in 1849, an auxiliary parochial or subscription school was opened, also a subscription school in Sinclairtown, and one in Gallatown, in all of which a sound and useful education is imparted.

AUCHTERTOOL is a small inland parish and village, the latter situated 4 miles W. from Kirkcaldy, and about the same distance N.W. from Kinghorn, and in the midst of a beautifully diversified landscape bounded on the north by Abbotshall, on the south by Kinghorn, on the east by Auchterderran, and on the west by Bath. Its length is seven miles and its breadth 1½. Agriculture is the principal pursuit of the inhabitants, there not being any kind of manufacture or trade in the place, except a distillery. There is an Established church and a Board school here. From a little lake called Camillaloch, in this parish, the river Teal takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or "Halliards." Auchterteel, is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teal. The acreage of the parish is 2,738; the population in 1881 being 706.

LARGO (UPPER AND LOWER),

LUNDIN MILL, AND THE PARISH OF NEWBURN.

LARGO parish lies on the shore of the Firth of Forth, between Newburn and Kilsconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west, its inland quarters being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains three villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTON OF) LARGO, LOWER LARGO, and LUNDIN MILL; the first is situated a mile from the sea, on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—3 miles N.W. from the former, 9 W. from the latter, 11 S. by W. from St. Andrews, 9 S. from Cupar, and 12 N.E. from Kirkcaldy. Its length from north to south is nearly 4½ miles, and its average breadth 8 miles. The most striking feature in the landscape is Largo Law, a conical hill, with a double summit covered with verdure to upwards of 900 feet above the sea. From its top a splendid view of the Firth of Forth, with its islands, and the opposite shore of the Lothians, is obtained. The minerals worked are coal and limestone, the latter being most excellent in quality, and until recently was extensively wrought. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birthplace of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who in the reign of James IV. defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull, and otherwise defended the shores of Scotland at his own private expense. The East of Fife branch of the North British Railway Company passes within a short distance of the village of Lower Largo, where there is a station. The Simpson Institute Hall a handsome stone building in the old Scottish style, was erected by means of a legacy of £4,000, bequeathed by Mrs. Galloway in memory of her father, the late George Simpson, of Upper Largo. It is used for educational, recreative, and social purposes, and contains public hall, library, and billiard table, with grounds, bowling green, and tennis court. It was opened May 8th, 1891. A hospital, which stands in the village of Kirkton, was erected by means of an endowment by a Mr. John Wood, a native of the place; it is a neat building, in the Gothic style. The intention of the founder was one of a peculiar nature—any man "of the name of Wood" may have admission here, to whatever part of Scotland he may belong. The foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per annum. The National Bank of Scotland, Limited, has a branch, and a Savings Bank is also established. Both Upper and Lower Largo are favorite resorts for sea bathing, and attract a great number of visitors in the bathing season. George Johnston, Esq. of Lathisk, is lord of the manor and principal landowner. In 1881 the parish of Largo, the acreage of which is 7,386, had a population of 2,234.

LOWER LARGO is a fishing village in the parish of Largo, one mile S.W. from Upper Largo, situated at the head of an indentation of the Firth of Forth, called Largo Bay; it stands at the efflux of a rivulet named the Keil, whose estuary forms a harbour to the place. This village would have remained amongst the most obscure of coast villages but from the circumstance of its having been the birthplace of Alexander Selkirk, rendered famous by the pen of De Foe as "Robinson Crusoe." The house in which Selkirk was born stood here, but from its decayed state was demolished. It was an ordinary cottage of one storey and a garret, and was stationed on the north side of the main street of Largo. A descendant of this person, of the name of Catherine Selkirk, was resident in this village, until her death, which occurred in 1862. Mr. David Gillies, of Cardy Works, also a descendant of the family, has erected, on the site of his birthplace, a very handsome life-size bronze statue to Alexander Selkirk, which was unveiled 11th December, 1885, by the Countess of Aberdeen. The tablet bears the inscription—"In memory of Alexander Selkirk, mariner, the original of Robinson Crusoe, who lived in the island of Juan Fernandez, in complete solitude, for four years and four months. He died 1728, Lieutenant of H.M.S. Weymouth, aged 47 years." In the parish are edifices for congregations of the Established and Free churches, Baptists and United Presbyterians. With the churches schools are connected. On the east bank of the Keil are the ruins of the ancient castle of Pitcavie.

LUNDIN MILL is a village adjoining Lower Largo, in the parish of Largo. There are a few handsome villas at Lundin Links, where there is a station on the Leven and East of Fife Railway. It is a place of great antiquity. The house of Lundin has been taken down but the square tower, which formed part of the ancient castle of Lundin, still remains. It was formerly the residence of a family of that name, who held property of great extent in the district as early as the reign of David II. Here also are the three "Standing Stones, of Lundin." They are supposed to have once formed part of a Druidical temple, and to have occupied their present site for about 2,000 years. Population in 1881, 386.

NEWBURN is a parish lying two miles east of Lower Largo, bounded on the north by Kilsconquhar, on the south of Largo Bay, on the east by Elie, and on the west by Largo. Its length is three miles and breadth one mile and a half, and it embraces 8,099 acres. About three-fourths of the land is under cultivation, the remainder being pasture and woodland. The parish being quite rural, the inhabitants depend on agriculture for employment. There is a parish church and school. In accordance with a bequest of Mr. John Wood, the parochial teacher receives an additional emolument sufficient for the board and education of six boys of the name of Wood, who enter at the age of seven and leave at fifteen. Wood's school has recently been transferred into Wood's trust for bursaries, by H.M. Commissioners, for the benefit of the adjoining parishes. Population in 1881, 344.

WITH THE PARISH OF KINGGLASSIE.

LESLIE is a parish and burgh of barony, containing the manufacturing town of its own name, 12 miles s. from Kinross, the like distance s. w. from Cupar, 9 n. w. from Kirkcaldy, and 8 w. from Markinch. Its length is upwards of four miles, and its breadth three miles. It is seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and shallow vale on the northern side, and situated on a public road up the Vale of Leven, leading into Kinross-shire. The town, which is governed by commissioners, consists principally of one street, running from east to west. It is a very ancient place, often frequented by King James when holding court of Falkland; and here is the scene laid of the song of the "Jolly Beggars." Of its age, the irregularity of its streets and architecture of the houses (being built with the gable ends to the street) are proofs. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty; the streets of the town are gas-lighted. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public green, of a triangular figure; in former times this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting for the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last sixty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled. This increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of flax spinning, paper making, and bleaching; the works of these are chiefly established on the banks of the Leven. A branch railway runs from the west end of the town to join the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British railway at Markinch. There is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Ltd. established here. The Hon. George Waldegrave Leslie has a seat (Leslie House) at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure grounds and agreeable plantations. The places of worship are the

LEVEN,

WITH INNER LEVEN AND THE PARISH OF SCOONIE.

LEVEN is a town in the parish of Scoonie, 9 miles N.E. from Kirkcaldy, 4 N.E. from Wemyss, and 3 S.W. from Largo, situate on the coast of the Firth of Forth, on the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of three principal streets, irregularly built, but contains some good houses, with several lanes and detached residences. A line of railway, the East of Fife branch, from Thornton station on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British railway, gives the town the benefit and facility for that mode of transit; this branch railway is now extended east to St. Andrews and Dundee. The town has also the benefit of a harbour. A dock has been constructed at a cost of about £40,000. It is 500 feet long by 250 feet broad, with a depth of water on the sill of 14 feet, and vessels have been loaded here up to 400 tons. It was opened in January, 1880. The principal imports are flax, tow, barley, linseed, bones and timber. The town is greatly improved, and its trade augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of INNER LEVEN, is a handsome stone bridge. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, and seed crushing, paper making, engineering, &c., the mills of the first-named trade especially, employing a considerable number of hands. A bone dust mill, salt works, and rope making, are the other leading branches carried on here and in the vicinity. The Fife Coal Co., whose offices adjoin the railway station, are the principal employers of labour in Leven. There are four branch banking houses. During the summer months Leven is the resort of a number of families from London, Edinburgh, and the interior for the kind, affords superior accommodation either to families, tourists, or to commercial gentlemen; to it has been added a large posting establishment. Leven is a burgh of barony, and has now a chief and junior magistrates. The purposes of lighting, cleaning, and water are carried out in the burgh by commissioners appointed under the General Police Act for Scotland, which has been adopted for some time. The sheriff holds a small debt circuit court here, the day after the second Monday in January, April, and July, and Friday after the first Monday in October. The The Greig Institute is a substantial building, of cha-to design, erected in 1878, by public subscription. It contains news room, library, billiard room, and class room for technical subjects under Government examination. The scheme originated as a People's Institute, and its name and history are associated with Mr. Greig, of Glencarse, who gave the site and £1,000 towards the building fund. There are several mansions in the neighbourhood, and a number of houses and cottages on the Links at the south part of the town, where there are some fine open downs, on which several Golfing societies exercise in that healthy amusement, and annually play for gold and silver medals. There is also an excellent bowling green at the Links. Salt water and brine baths have been provided, and are much appreciated by visitors. Population in 1881, including Inner Leven, 3,067, and in 1891, 3,998.

SCOONIE is a parish on the west coast of the county. It is bounded on the north by Kennoway, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Largo, and on the west by Wemyss. Its length from north to south is five miles, and its greatest breadth is two miles and a half. The surface inland rises with a gradual ascent to an elevation of 600 feet, and there are several heights which command extensive views of the Firth of Forth and the Lothians. The land generally is in a high state of cultivation. The minerals are ochre and coal. It contains the town of Leven, which is a burgh of barony. The parish church stands close to the town; a Free church, a United Presbyterian, and an Episcopal church are the other places of worship. The parish comprises an area of 4,091 statute acres, and had a population in 1881 of 8,730, and in 1891, 4,698.

LIMEKILNS,

BRUCEHAVEN, AND CHARLESTOWN.

LIMEKILNS, with Brucehaven, is a small seaport in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town, 3 miles S. of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. It was at one time a place of considerable trade, but at the present day the harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of vessels. Shipbuilding is carried on at Brucehaven shipyard. There is a congregation of United Presbyterians, and a public school here. Dunfermline is the nearest railway station, 3 miles distant. Population in 1881, 699.

CHARLESTOWN is a village a short distance from Limekilns, and also in the parish of Dunfermline, its post town and nearest railway station, from which it is 4 miles distant. It is the property of the Earl of Elgin. There are extensive lime works in the vicinity, from which large quantities of lime are exported annually. It is likewise the shipping port for several of the adjacent collieries. The harbour —which was formed by the above nobleman—is now the property of the North British Railway Company, and affords excellent accommodation for the loading and unloading of vessels. Two manufacturing concerns for salt and an iron-works are among the other businesses of this flourishing little place. There is also a public school here. Population in 1881, 632.

LOCHGELLY,

WITH AUCHTERDERRAN, BEATH, BALLINGRY, COWDENBEATH, KELTY, AND OAKFIELD.

LOCHGELLY is a police burgh and rising village in the parish of Auchterderran, 8 miles w. from Kirkcaldy, and the same distance N.E. from Dunfermline. About a mile and a half distant are the ruins of the castle of Lochore. There is a station three-quarters of a mile from Lochgelly, on the Dunfermline branch of the North British Railway. Close thereto are the works and offices of the Lochgelly Iron and Coal Company, Limited. At the works are four furnaces for smelting, but they have not been in use for some years. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established in the village, and there is also a respectable hotel. The places of worship are a quoad sacra church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church and a Roman Catholic chapel. The inhabitants are principally engaged in the coal mines, which abound in the neighbourhood. The parish church of Auchterderran is at the hamlet of that name, two and a half miles from Lochgelly. There are two large Board schools and a Roman Catholic school. There are now (1892) in course of erection a drill hall for the rifle volunteers, and a fine Co-operative stores. Population of Lochgelly in 1891, 4,184.

AUCHTERDERRAN is a parish in the Western part of the county, bounded by Beath and Ballingry on the west, Abbotshall and Auchtertool on the south and south-east, Dysart on the east, and Kinglassie and Portmouck on the north. It has an irregular outline, and is about four miles long from north to south, and about three miles broad. The water of Orr flows eastward through the parish, and in the southern part there is a sheet of water called Lochgelly, which discharges itself by a small rivulet into that stream. Though the soil is only moderately fertile, the inhabitants apply themselves assiduously to agriculture, and have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. Most of the parish is under tillage, and the rest in pasture. A considerable bed of coal and ironstone traverses this part of the county. The former has long been celebrated for its excellent quality; the latter is of the black band variety, but is not now worked. Lochgelly is the only village of any consequence in this parish. There is an Established church and a public school. Cardenden is the nearest railway station, about a mile from Auchterderran. In 1891 the entire parish of Auchterderran, the area of which is 7,858 acres, had a population of 6,185.

BEATH is a parish about 4 miles in length and about 3 in breadth. Its boundaries are on the west, Dunfermline; on the east, Ballingry and Auchterderran; on the north, Cleish; on the south, Aberdeen and Dalgety. The ground is hilly, and is watered by the Kelty and a stream which flows from Loch Fitty, a shallow lake on the western boundary. The soil is in some parts good, in others inferior. Several collieries are in active operation, and give employment to most of the inhabitants. Acreage, 6,345; population in 1891, 8,296.

COWDENBEATH is a police burgh in the parish of Beath, 2 miles w. from Lochgelly, and is a station on the same line of railway as Loch-gelly, and has also a station on the main line from Perth to Edinburgh. Here are the extensive collieries of the Cowdenbeath Coal Company, and a linen factory belonging to Messrs. Erskine Beveridge & Co. Dunfermline. There are in course of erection a Free church and a United Presbyterian church, the former at an estimated cost of £2,100, and the latter, £1,700; also a new Co-operative Stores at a cost of £6,000. There is a public hall here. The parish church is a mile S.W. of the village. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches, a chapel for Baptists, and a Board school. Population in 1891, 4,249.

KELTY and OAKFIELD are villages in this parish, and adjoin Blairadam, their post town, each about 2½ miles from Cowdenbeath, the former being a station on the Kinross branch of the North British railway. At Kelty are the collieries of the Fife Coal Company, Limited, and the Blairadam Coal Co. and there are a Free church and a Board school.

BALLINGRY is a parish 3 miles in length and about 1½ in breadth, and is 2½ miles from Lochgelly, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Portmouck, on the east and south by Auchterderran and Kinglassie, and on the west by Beath and Cleish, a small corner of the village of Lochgelly is in this parish, also the mining villages of Lumphinans and Lochore. Coal is raised in abundance in the parish, about one-half of which is under tillage, and the other half wood and pasture. There was formerly a considerable loch in this parish, called Loch Orr, but it is now all drained and in a state of cultivation. The only place of worship is the Established church, situated in the north-west of the parish. There is a public school here. The nearest railway station is Lochgelly, about 2½ miles distant. Acreage, 4,621, Population in 1891, 2,224.

MARKINCH,

KENNOWAY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BALCURVIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, MILTON OF BALGONIE, STAR, THORNTON, WINDYGATES, AND WOODSIDE.

MARKINCH is a parish containing the village of its own name, a burgh of barony, and THORNTON, WINDYGATES, MILTON OF BALGONIE, COALTON OF BALGONIE, WOODSIDE, and BALCURVIE. Markinch is a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British railway, and is situated near the centre of the parish at a distance of 10 miles S. from Cupar, 8 N. E. from Kirkcaldy, and between 6 and 7 W. from Leven. It occupies an open situation on a piece of irregular rising ground, and on the highest part is seated the church.
A branch line of railway from the North British main line connects this place with Leslie. There are extensive paper mills, bleachfields, a woollen manufactory, and corn mills in active operation.

The districts round abound in coal. In the village there is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians. The parish of Markinch, which embraces 9,725 acres, is bounded by Kennoway on the east, on the west by Dyart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle; and on the south by Wemyss; it extends from north to south 5½ miles, by a mean breadth of 2½ miles, and being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south, and is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation, and must be ranked among the most beautiful parts of the shire. It is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Ore, and the great road through the county crosses it. The North British railway is carried over the first named river by means of a viaduct of ten arches, nearly ninety feet in height. Balgonie Castle, the property of Charles Barrington Balfour, Esq., of New on Don, is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some finely wooded grounds. About half a mile to the east is Balfour House, the seat of Mrs. Erskine Wemyss, surrounded by pleasing enclosures and plantations, and in a delightful situation. Balbirnie is an elegant mansion, the seat of John Balfour, Esq., and lies about half a mile to the west of the village. There is a spacious Town Hall, and a public school. The village, altogether, has of late years undergone great improvement. Population of the entire parish in 1891, 6,377 and of the village 1,350; but since the last census, the Boundary Commissioners transferred the village of Inner Leven from Markinch parish to Wemyss parish, which reduces the population of the parish to 5,777.

WINDYGATES, now the head of a post district, in this parish, stands on the high road between Markinch and Leven, about 2 miles from the latter. Contiguous to the village is the extensive distillery of 'The Distillers' Company, Limited; also the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. & W. Beveridge, and the bleach works of the Haugh Bleaching Co. Close to Windygates is CAMERON BRIDGE, a station on the Leven and East of Fife railway. There is a public school. Population in 1891, 453.

WOODSIDE, in the parish of Markinch, is a small village about one mile and a half S.W. from Markinch, its post town, and 2 from Thornton. The inhabitants are chiefly employed at the paper mills and bleachfields in the neighbourhood. Population in 1891, 205. The nearest railway station is Markinch.

MILTOWN, or MILTON OF BALGONIE, is a village about midway between Windygates and Markinch, in the parish of Markinch. There are an Established church, a public school, and a sub-post office. Population in 1891, 861. The nearest railway station is Markinch, a mile and a half distant.

COALTOWN, or COALTON OF BALGONIE, lies one mile and a half south from Markinch, its post town and parish. The inhabitants are principally employed at the Balgonie Colliery and bleachfields in the immediate neighbourhood. There is a public school. Population in 1891, 568. The nearest railway station is Markinch.

THORNTON is a village in the parish of Markinch, situated near the south-eastern extremity of the parish, and close to the THORNTON JUNCTION on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee section of the North British and the Leven and East of Fife railways. There is a joint station here. The D. & N. Combination Post office, erected in 1862, at a cost of about £6,000, is situated about half a mile from this village; it is a neat stone building, capable of receiving 150 of the post of the surrounding parishes. There are also a chapel of the Established Church, a school, and a post office. Population in 1891, 607.

BALCURVIE is situated on an eminence about half a mile from Windygates, its post town, in the parish of Markinch, about 8 miles S. from the latter place, one mile S. from Kennoway, and half a mile from Cameron Bridge, a station on the Leven and East of Fife railway. The inhabitants are principally employed at the flax spinning mills of Messrs. G. & W. Beveridge, and the distillery of The Distillers' Company, Limited. Agriculture is carried on extensively. The land in and around Balcurvie is under a high state of cultivation. There is a public school here. Population in 1891, 249.

KENNOWAY parish, which lies to the east of Markinch, is 3½ miles long and 2 broad, situated on an acclivity arising from the south to the north; it embraces 3,965 acres, and is bounded on the north by Kettle, on the south and west by Markinch, and on the east by Seconie. It commands a delightful and extensive prospect from its southern side of the Firth of Forth, its islands and the Lothians, while from its northern extremity the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus, and Perth, including the Grampian hills. The village of Kennoway is situated about 4 miles E. from Markinch, and 3 W. from Leven, at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, which contain caves, which were probably used as places of refuge and retreat for marauders in ancient times. Agriculture appears to be the principal pursuit of the inhabitants. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians. There is a public school and a post office. Population of the parish in 1891, 1,458, and of the village, 789. Cameron Bridge is the nearest railway station, a mile and a half distant.

About 2 miles N.W. from Kennoway, and one and a half from Markinch, is the village of STAR, in the former parish. It has a public school and post office. Agriculture alone supplies occupation for its inhabitants. Population in 1891, 246. The nearest railway station is Markinch.

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABBIE, DUNBOG, AND FLISK.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, seaport, and the capital of its parish, 11.33 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 15 miles S.W. from Dundee, 11 S.E. from Perth, 10 N.W. from Cupar, and 5 N. from Auchtermuchty, situated on the side of the North British railway, and on the south bank of the Tay. It consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandise, and a spacious harbour. The Tay above mentioned being navigable only for vessels of about two hundred tons, those of greater burden put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. That the town is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable. According to some authorities its origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey of Lindores, founded in 1178 by David, Earl of Huntingdon, on his return from the Holy Land. The unfortunate Duke of Rothesay, who was starved to death in Falkland Palace, was buried here. The ruins are a little to the west of the town. Several stone coffins have at different times been discovered, and are still to be seen. The name of Newburgh is supposed to be conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The Town Hall stands near the centre of the town, and the parish church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome edifice, erected in 1833, and dedicated to St. Catherine. In the year 1266 the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1693 Charles I. granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh, in virtue of which grant Newburgh is said to have sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates, but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honours. There is, however, at the present time, no evidence of it ever having sent a member to the Scottish parliament. There are two ancient crosses within the parish, one at Mugdrum, about thirteen feet high, and the Macduff cross, or rather the pedestal of it, of great interest, from its having been granted to Macduff as a sanctuary, for his successful aid against Macbeth. The government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies, and fourteen councillors, with a treasurer and a town clerk. Within the last fifty years Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. There is a branch banking establishment—the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a Savings Bank in connection with the bank. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple trade of the place, exclusive of which the business in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable; of the former especially large exports are made. The benefits derived from the salmon fishery and from the sale of fruitals add considerably to the welfare of the place. To the parish of Newburgh many interesting particulars belong, which the reader will find amply detailed in Messrs. Chambers' excellent Gazetteer, and also in the history of Newburgh, by Alexander Laing, Esq. F.S.A. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian and Evangelical Union churches, and a Baptist chapel. A fair is held on the third Friday in June. The principal landowners are Edmund Balfour Hay Patterson, Esq., of Mugdrum, and Robert Cathcart, Esq., of Pitcairnie. The entire parish of Newburgh has an area of 1,955 acres, and had a population in 1891 of 1,812.

ABBIE parish, 2 miles S.E. from Newburgh, which is of considerable extent, but greatly intersected by other parishes lies on the south bank of the river Tay, amongst those highlands to the westward which have acquired the appellation of the Ochil Hills. The surface is remarkably uneven, but the soil is in general fertile. It possesses quarries of whinstone, considerable quantities of which are shipped and used for street paving. The parish is well watered with lochs, the chief of which is the Loch of Lindores, about a mile in length and of irregular breadth. This piece of water is well stored with fish, and being surrounded by some romantic scenery is a beautiful object in the view of the country. There is a parish church and a handsome public school. MOUNT PLEASANT, GLENBURGH and LINDORES are hamlets in this parish. Acreage, 6,371. Population in 1891, 778.

DUNBOG is a small parish, 3 miles long and one mile broad, situated $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Newburgh and 5 N.W. from Cupar, bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Monimail, on the east by Moudie, and on the west by Abbie. It consists of a valley lying between two ridges of the Ochil Hills, the soil is of a rich black mould, which produces abundant crops of every description. There is a parish church and a handsome public school; the latter adorned with clock and bell. The nearest railway station is at Newburgh. Acreage, 2,324. Population in 1891, 346.

FLISK is a parish stretching 5 miles on the banks of the Tay. It is 5 miles N.E. from Newburgh and 6 N.W. from Cupar. It is bounded on the north by the Tay, on the south by Creich and Abbie, on the east by Belmerino, and on the west by Dunbog. The soil, although of a clayey nature, is nevertheless fertile and well cultivated from the shore of the river to the Ochil Hills, a portion of which are situated in this parish. There is a church and a public school in the parish. The nearest railway station is at Newburgh. Acreage, 2,614. Population in 1891, 192.

NEWPORT,

WITH FORGAN, BALMERINO, WORMIT, AND GAULDRY.

NEWPORT, a handsome village in the parish of Forgan, stretching along the Firth of Tay, is picturesquely situated, directly opposite to Dundee (its post town), about 2 miles s. therefrom, and 3 miles s.w. from Tayport, the ground sloping upwards to a considerable height from the river Tay. Many elegant villas have been erected; and as there is constant communication with Dundee by railway since the opening of the new Tay Bridge, and also by the steamers which ply hourly, and the climate being salubrious and comparatively mild, it has now become a popular suburb of Dundee. Newport was made a burgh in November, 1887. It possesses five handsome churches, a commodious public hall, erected at a cost of £4,000, and a Board school, built in 1878, to accommodate upwards of 400 scholars. The south end of the Tay Bridge is at Wormit, about a mile to the west of Newport. There is a railway station at East Newport for goods and passengers, and one at West Newport for passengers only. Population of Newport in 1891, 2,400.

WORMIT is pleasantly and conveniently situated for Dundee business men, many tasteful villas overlooking the river having been erected since the opening of the Tay Bridge, there being a station here.

FORGAN parish extends for about 4 miles in length and about 2½ in breadth, along the south bank of the Firth of Tay, exactly opposite the town of Dundee, and comprises 4,983 acres. It is bounded by Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Balmerino on the west, and Leuchars and Kilmany on the south. The parish church of Forgan is nearly 2 miles inland, being 10 miles N.E. from Cupar and the same distance N.W. from St. Andrews. There is also a Board school. The landward part of the parish is richly wooded and well cultivated. The mansion house of St. Fort, the residence of Sir Walter Corbett, Bart., standing out conspicuously in the landscape, is in this parish; and about 1 mile w. from Newport is the small harbour of WOODHAVEN. Newport and Wormit are the nearest railway stations, each being about a mile distant. Population of the parish in 1891, 3,760.

BALMERINO, or Balmertnoch (pronounced Balmernie), is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Tay, from 5½ to 6 miles w. from Newport, extending about 3½ miles in length and 2½ in breadth. The surface is a gradual decline to the side of the river. The harbour of Balmerino is small, though at one time a considerable quantity of grain was exported from it, but this trade has now declined. The kirk and little hamlet lie on the road along the low ground from the Ferry to Newburgh; and there is a Free church at Logie. To the west, and on a slip of ground intruding upon the waters of the Tay, stands the ancient village of Balmerino, adjacent to which are the ruins of the once famed abbey, a beautiful structure, begun by Alexander II. and his mother, Emergarde, daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, in 1229. These ruins, which are richly clothed with ivy and surrounded with some fine tall trees, are much admired by strangers. The nearest railway station is at Wormit, about 3½ miles distant. Acreage 3,431. Population in 1891, 696.

GAULDRY, a small village in the above parish, is about 4 miles s.w. from Newport. Here is a Board school. The aspect of the country is of an undulating character, and agricultural. The nearest railway station is at Wormit, about 2 miles distant.

KIRKTON is a small hamlet in the parish of Balmerino.

PITTENWEEM AND ST. MONANCE,

WITH THE PARISH OF CARNBEE.

PITTENWEEM is a royal burgh and seaport, in the parish of its name, 24 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 21 N.W. from Kirkcaldy, 5 S.W. from Crail, 10 S.E. from St. Andrews, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ E. from Kilconquhar; situated on the course of the Firth of Forth, one mile from West Anstruther, and occupying rather an elevated site of ground above the harbour. It is bounded on the east by Wester Anstruther, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the north by Carnbee, and on the west by St. Monance. Its length is one mile and a half, and breadth half a mile. It consists of three good streets, with a few by-theroughfares, the houses generally bearing an ancient aspect. The dwellings around the harbour are of a respectable appearance; and over this part of the town stand the remains of the priory of Pittenweem, the date of which is not with certainty known. Exclusive of some fragments of the religious edifice, there is a quadrangular range of curious antique buildings entire, said to have been the residence of the prior and other superior officers of the establishment. These remains exhibit a fine specimen of the domestic ecclesiastical architecture of the ages anterior to the Reformation. Adjacent to the monastic ruins stands the parish church, an old edifice with a turreted spire. Pittenweem was constituted a royal burgh by James V. in 1537. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and eight councillors; and joins with Cupar, St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, and Kilkenny, in sending one member to parliament. Between the period of Pittenweem being erected into a royal burgh in 1639, it appears that it was a place of considerable note and trade; but, from the latter period to the year of 1645, it suffered severely—no fewer than thirteen sail of large vessels belonging to this port having been either taken by the enemy or wrecked. It is now a fishing station of some importance and fish curing is carried on rather extensively, in addition to which the trade in grain is of some consequence. The places of worship are the parish, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian churches; it contains also two schools. It was at Pittenweem that the robbery was committed upon the collector of the excise by Wilson and Robertson, which led to the outrages of the Porteous mob and the consequent catastrophe; the house in which this transaction took place is still standing on the north side of the street, north of the church. There is a station on the East of Fife branch of the North British line. The area of the parish is 663 statute acres, and its population was in 1891, 1,991.

ST. MONANCE (or St. Monans) is a parish one mile and a half from Pittenweem, on the same coast as the latter place, containing the village or small town of its own name, and that of ABERCROMBIE. The parish measures a mile long, and about a mile and a half broad. It is bounded on the north by Carnbee, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Pittenweem, and on the west by Elie and Kilconquhar. There is a small harbour attached to it, which at one period ranked amongst the most considerable fishing stations on the coast of Fife, and its inhabitants still pursue that avocation. St. Monance is a burgh of barony, governed by three bailies, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. From the adjacent country its little church alone is visible, standing on the height above the houses, and so near to the sea as to be occasionally wet with its foam; it is a curious old Gothic edifice. Until the year 1646, the name of the parish was Abercrombie, or Iovernie; its present name is derived from Saint Monan, a martyr celebrated for his miracles in Fife and the adjacent Isle of May. The railway station is adjoining the village, on the East of Fife branch of the North British line. Acreage, 1,203. Population in 1891, 1,998.

CARNBEE is a parish situate 8 miles N.E. from Pittenweem, its post town, entirely inland, containing the villages of ARNCRACH and OVENSTONE. Its length is about 5 miles, with a breadth of 3. It is bounded on the north by Cameron, on the south by Pittenweem, on the east by Crail and Kilkenny, on the west by Kilconquhar, and on the south-west by St. Monance. A ridge of hills runs through the centre of it, the highest of which is Kellie Law, having an altitude of 800 feet above the level of the sea. Kellie Castle, formerly the seat of the Earls of Kellie, stands in this parish, on the south side of Kellie Law, and occupies a prominent and beautiful situation. The minerals are limestone and freestone. The greater part of the land is rich and fertile, and well cultivated, the rest being adapted for pasture. There are a parish church and school at Carnbee, and a Free church and school at Arnocrach. The nearest railway station is at Pittenweem, about two and a half miles distant. Acreage, 8,396. Population in 1891, 952.

ST. ANDREWS,

WITH THE PARISHES OF DENINO, CAMERON, ST. LEONARDS, AND LEUCHARS.

ST. ANDREWS is a city, a royal burgh, and seaport, and perhaps the most interesting town, as regards its ecclesiastical history, in North Britain, 39 N.E. from Edinburgh, 10 E. from Cupar, 10 N. from Anstruther, and the same distance N.W. from Crail, and stands within the bay to which it gives its name, wherein flow the Eden and a small stream called the Kinness. Its history is mingled with the civil and ecclesiastical annals of Scotland, especially the latter; but the narrow space within which the proprietors of this work is confined in the descriptive notice of towns denies to them the gratifying task of performing that ample justice to those subjects which their importance demands, and which has been so ably and so elaborately treated by the authors of the "Gazetteer of Scotland."

The city of St. Andrews in 1410 first saw the establishment of its university, which was the earliest of the kind in Scotland, having originated with Bishop Wardlaw, a munificent and liberal minded prelate; in 1411 it was endowed by charter. The college of St. Salvator was erected by Bishop Kennedy in 1455, that of St. Leonard in 1512, and that of St. Mary, or the divinity college, in 1537; in 1747 the institutions of St. Salvator and St. Leonard were united by parliamentary statute. The University library contains upwards of 100,000 volumes. The united college has a principal, with professors of Greek, logic, natural philosophy, moral philosophy, humanity, mathematics, natural history, anatomy and education. The college of St. Mary is an institution of less consequence, and consists of a principal, and professors of divinity, biblical criticism, church history and Oriental languages. The site of the Madras college is on the south side of South street, immediately behind and comprehending within it part of that fine old ruin of the Black Friars, which will thus be associated with an improved system of education for centuries to come—uniting tastefully and appropriately something of the splendour of departed with much of the elegance and usefulness of present times. This noble institution, which was endowed by the late Dr. Bell, the distinguished founder of several similar establishments both in this and in other towns in Scotland, cannot fail to secure to his memory, for ages to come, that veneration and esteem to which, as a benefactor of his race, he is so well entitled. The foundation stone was laid on the 9th April, 1832. Under the plan formulated by the Endowed Schools Commissioners for Scotland, this institution is now converted into a school for secondary education only, instead of the original arrangement, which included both the primary and secondary departments.

The town originally consisted of four streets; Swallow street; (which has for centuries disappeared), towards the sea; North street, in which a number of elegant edifices are now situated, together with the buildings of the united college, partly old and partly new; Market street, which runs through the middle of the town; South street, which is spacious, well paved, and lined with lime trees on both sides, terminates towards the east in a beautiful view of the ruins of the cathedral, and towards the west in a fine arched entrance, being the old city gate. The streets all concentrate towards the old cathedral, and the still more ancient tower of St. Regulus, or, as it is more commonly called, "The Square Tower." In this quarter still stands a great part of the magnificent wall reared by Prior John Hepburn, in 1516; it runs along the south-east side of the town, and contains fourteen round and square towers, each having a niche on the outside for a saint, and appears one of the most interesting relics in the place. From the top of St. Regulus' tower, 135 feet in height, there is a beautiful view of the Bell rock, the bay, the city and the surrounding country. The ruins, rapidly decreasing, of the once formidable castle, commonly supposed to be the scene of Cardinal Beaton's cruelty to others, and of his own assassination, lie towards the north-east, and jut out into the sea. On the shore to the westward is a small eminence called the Witch Hill, the place where those convicted of witchcraft suffered. Near this spot is a monument raised in 1842 to the memory of the martyrs—Wishart, Mill, and others. It is in the form of an obelisk, and is forty-five feet in height.

As before stated, St. Andrews is a royal burgh, by virtue of a charter conferred by David I., which was confirmed by Malcolm II., the unfortunate monarch who was slain in Glamis castle in 1034; the charter, together with the silver keys of the city, and the axe which was used for the decapitation of Sir Robert Spottiswoode and some other royalists, are still to be seen in the town clerk's office. The city is governed by a provost, a dean of guild and four baillies, twenty-two councillors, and a treasurer. The burgh unites with Cupar, the Anstruthers, Kiltrenny, Pittenweem, and Crail in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament. The present representative is Henry T. Anstruther, Esq. St. Andrews at one period had an extensive foreign trade, having from thirty to forty trading vessels. The harbour is not large, but it is safe when reached: its most dangerous wind is from the north-east. The export traffic is chiefly in potatoes and grain, and the import in coals, pavement, timber, &c. Six banking establishments are in operation here, namely—branches respectively of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, the Cheque Bank, Limited, also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank. There are seven principal hotels, viz.:—the Royal, in South street; the Star and the Cross Keys in Market street; The Golf and Rusack's Marine Hotel, both charmingly situated on the Links and facing the sea, the latter at present in course of enlargement, a new wing being built on the south side at a cost of about £6,000; the Imperial (lately enlarged and improved), in North street and Murray Park, and the Alexandra, in Alexandra place. Its railway facilities have in recent years been very much improved. It is connected with the main line from Edinburgh to Dundee and the north, via the new Tay Bridge, by a junction at Leuchars, 6 miles distant. A new line connecting St. Andrews with the burghs of Anstruther, Crail, Pittenweem and other towns on the south Fifeshire coast, joining the main line to Edinburgh at Thornton Junction, was opened in June, 1887.

Nearly opposite St. Mary's College, on the north side of the street, stands the town church, originally built by Bishop Targot, in 1112, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It was in this church that John Knox preached his famous sermon which led to the destruction of the cathedral and monastic buildings. It is a large but inconvenient edifice about 150 feet long by 60 feet wide. The present building was erected in 1800 upon the foundations of the old one, and the interior of late has been very much improved. Within the door, and on the right side, is the superb monument to Archbishop Sharp, erected by his son in 1679. It is comprised of white marble, the figure of the prelate is represented in the attitude of kneeling, and below is exhibited, in relief, the assassination of this ecclesiastical dignitary. It was thoroughly repaired in 1850, at an expense of about £100. Besides the two parish churches, an additional one has been erected. There are also Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian churches, and Baptist, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels. Golf, one of the national games of Scotland, has its stronghold in St. Andrews, the Royal and Ancient Golf Club having been established in 1754; the Queen is patroness, and it numbers upwards of 800 noblemen and gentlemen as its present members; they hold two great meetings annually. St. Andrews, whether as regards its early importance in the history of Scotland, with which it is so intimately associated—its numerous relics of antiquity, which everywhere arrest the eye; its venerable religious edifices, and its seminaries of learning—must be admitted to be a place possessing undying excellence to the mind of the antiquary, and replete with interest to the well-informed historian, the contemplative tourist, and the casual visitor. A hospital, the gift of the late William Gibson, for aged, infirm and sick persons, has been erected in Argyle street, at a cost of £4,000; it was opened in January, 1884. There are three public halls—viz., the Town Hall, in South street; the City Hall, in Church square; and the Rifle Volunteers' Hall, in Alfred place, the last-named and the Town Hall being large structures, suitable for entertainments and public meetings. DENHEAD, a small village, is partly in this parish and that of Cameron. BOARHILLS, KINCAPLE, and STRATHKINNESS are also small villages distant about 4 miles from and in the parish of St. Andrews. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs (for cattle and hiring) on the second Tuesday in August and the first Monday after the 10th of November. The entire parish of St. Andrews embraces 11,42 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 7,835, of which number the town contained 6,458, in 1891 the parish numbered 8,755, and the town 6,833.

ST. LEONARDS is a small parish so intersected by that of St. Andrews that it is identical in all its interests. It consists of detached portions in and around the city, and is surrounded by the parishes of Kingsbarns, Crail, and Denino, and is connected both historically and politically with the city and parish of St. Andrews. Its area is about 1,003 acres, and its population in 1881 was 769.

CAMERON parish is situated about 3 miles s. of St. Andrews. It is bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Carnbee and Kilonquhar, on the east by Denino, and on the west by Ceres. Its length is about 6 miles, and its breadth 4, comprising an acreage of 9,325. The greater portion of the land is well cultivated, the remainder being pasture, well drained by numerous small streams. The nearest railway station is at Mount Melville, about 5 miles distant. There is a parish church and school at CAMERON, and a United Presbyterian church at LATHONES, and a Board school at RADERNIE, which are small places in the parish. DENHEAD is a small village, a portion of which is in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,003, and in 1891, 886.

DENINO, or as it is sometimes spelt Dunino, is situated 4 miles s. of St. Andrews, bounded on the north by St. Andrews, on the south by Crail and Carnbee, on the east by Kinghorn, and on the west by Cameron. It is 3 miles long and about the same in breadth. The land is highly cultivated, and is intersected by woodlands and streams. The parish church is a stone building in the Gothic style of architecture, erected in 1826. The nearest railway station is at Strathvie, about a mile and a quarter distant. Acreage, 2,737. Population in 1881, 297.

LEUCHARS parish is 9 miles in length by 5 in breadth, and contains an area of 13,354 acres. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, by the parishes of St. Andrews and Kemback on the south, by Dairsie and Logie on the west, and by Forgan and Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the north. The small rivulets or burns of Mobrai and Moonzie fall into the Eden near the village of Seggie; the former of these streams divides the parish into two portions. The surface is level and the soil tolerably fertile. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situated about a mile from the coast, and 6 n.w. from St. Andrews, on the road from that town to Dundee. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch of the North British railway passes through the parish, and there is a station in the village, and another at Leuchars Junction, about half a mile distant. The church is very ancient, and considered one of the most perfect specimens of Saxon architecture in Scotland; it is supposed to have been erected in the twelfth century. There is also a Free Church in the parish. GUARD BRIDGE is partly in this parish and partly in that of St. Andrews; the Guard Bridge Paper Co. Limited have extensive works here. SEGIE and BALMULLO are small villages also in this parish, which in 1881 possessed a population numbering 2,185, and in 1891, 2,370.

STRATHMIGLO

IS a parish and a small town—the latter nearly 2 miles s.w. from Auchtermuchty, and 8 N.E. from Kinross, and is a station on the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway, which runs close by the town, distant about 7 miles E. from Ladybank Junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee branch, situated in a pleasant plain and on the north bank of the Miglo or Eden; it consists chiefly of two streets, with several lanes diverging from them. The town house stands about the centre of the principal street; it has a square steeple, at the top of which is a balcony surrounded by balustrades, the whole being surmounted by a spire nearly eighty feet high. From the front of the steeple projects a stone pillar which formerly served as a sundial, now much defaced; above this are the arms of the house of Buthrie. By charter in 1600, the detached portions of Feus were erected into a burgh of barony, and this grant was confirmed by James VI. in 1605, but the nomination of bailies and admittance of burgesses was vested in the person of the superior. On the opposite side of the Miglo is the village of the FEUS or CASH, and between the old town and this village is a level meadow called Town-green, intersected by the Miglo, and belonging to the burgh. The manufacture of linen is carried on to a limited extent, and there is a bleach works. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and two Free churches. The first mentioned is a plain building standing at the entrance of the town. A fair is held at Strathmiglo on the last Friday in June. The parish of Strathmiglo, which embraces an area of 9,074 acres, had in 1891 a population of 1,795.

GATESIDE is a village in the parish of Strathmiglo, distant 2 miles W. therefrom, and contains a United Presbyterian church and a Board school.

TAYPORT,

WITH THE PARISH OF FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG.

TAYPORT, which was made into a burgh in 1897, is a small town in the parish of Ferry-Port-on-Craig, situated at the base of the hill opposite to Broughty Ferry, from which place it is distant about 2 miles s. across the river, 11 N. from Cupar, and 5 S.E. from Dundee. Previous to the construction of the railway, this place was identical in name with the parish, since that time it has taken the more appropriate name which it now bears. There is now railway communication between Tayport and Dundee by the new Tay Bridge, also with Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the South. For facilitating the shipping of goods, the railway company have constructed a dock and thrown out a pier, which can be approached by the steamers at all times of the tide. Many houses and villas have been erected on the slopes of the Tay, commanding a fine prospect of the opposite shore, Broughty Ferry and Dundee. There are three factories here for the spinning of yarns, and the manufacture of linen and jute goods, which provide employment for many of the inhabitants. The North of Scotland Bank, Limited, has a branch here. The salmon fishery, which is co-extensive with the parish along the coast, is actively pursued during the season, the fish being mostly sent to the London market; mussel dredging is also carried on extensively in the season. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free Church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. There is also a Board school, erected to accommodate about 600 scholars.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG is a parish 5 miles in length, and from half a mile to a mile in breadth, stretching along the south margin of the Tay to its mouth, where it empties itself into the German Ocean. The land rises to a hilly range extending westwards. It is bounded on the south by the parishes of Forgan and Leuchars, and on the north by the river Tay. The local situation of the parish naturally accounts for its name, situated as it is on a rock or Craig, and was formerly a ferry for the conveyance of passengers, horses, and cattle, so that this was literally a Ferry, whose port was on a Craig (or Crag)—hence the name; but now the steamers have long since abolished this mode of conveyance. The estate of Scotsraig, which comprises the whole parish, was formerly the property of Archbishop Sharp, of St. Andrews. The present mansion house was built in 1807, and is a neat and substantial building, situated amidst some fine plantations and well laid out grounds. The parish church, which is conveniently situated in the village of Tayport, where most of the inhabitants reside, is an old edifice, rebuilt in 1825, and at present is in a good state of preservation. In the immediate vicinity is a Board school. This parish, which embraces an area of 2,768 acres, in 1891 had a population of 2,952.

TORRYBURN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARNOCK AND SALINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF OAKLEY, CAIRNEYHILL, AND LOW TORRY.

TORRYBURN is a parish and village, the latter 17 miles w.s.w. from Kirkcaldy, 6 E. from Kincardine, 4½ w. from Dunfermline, its post town, and 2 E. from Culross; seated on Crombie point, a promontory on the Fifth, and 2½ miles from the Oakley station on the North British railway. The surface of this parish is beautifully diversified, and the high grounds command fine views of the Fifth of Forth and the Lothians. The situation of the village is pleasant and salubrious. The inhabitants at one time were chiefly employed in weaving, but this branch of industry has become extinct, and very little trade is now carried on. Some of the females are engaged in embroidering sewed muslins. From the rocky state of the shore it has been found impossible to form a harbour here; but a pier is situated at Crombie point, where steamers can land goods and passengers. The collieries of the Coltness Iron Co. Limited, situated at East Grange in this parish, find employment for most of the inhabitants. The parish lies in the south-west corner of the county, and extends along the shore of the Fifth of Forth, between the parish of Dunfermline on the east and that of Culross on the west, and measures from four to five miles in length by about two in breadth. The parish, which is formed by the union of the baronies of Torry and Crombie, derives its name from the Gaelic word Torry, signifying the "King's Height," and burn, the Scottish term for rivulet. Within the boundary of the parish and adjacent to Torryburn village is that of Low Torry. It is a very pretty village, having Torry Bay in front, with comparatively high back grounds protecting it from the northern blasts of winter. The principal estates in this parish are Craigflower, Torry, and Inzievar. Dunmarle estate is also adjacent. It possesses beautiful grounds and a museum, both of which are open to the public. The places of worship are the Established and Free churches, and there is a Board school. A fair is held at Torryburn on the second Wednesday in July. Oakley is the nearest railway station, 2½ miles distant. Acreage of the parish, 3,994. Population in 1881, 787, and in 1891, 935.

CARNOCK parish lies to the west of Dunfermline, its post town, from which it is 4 miles distant, and north of Torryburn, which parishes separate it from the Fifth of Forth. Like other parts of the country in this quarter, the ground is swelling and hilly, but very fertile, and in a high state of cultivation, the scenery in several parts being of a pleasing nature. Coal is abundant. No business of any consequence is carried on. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship, and there is also a Board school. Oakley is the nearest railway station, a mile and a half distant. Acreage of the parish, 3,492. Population of the parish in 1891, 987.

OAKLEY and CAIRNEYHILL are two villages in the parish of Carnock—the first-named, which is about a mile from Carnock village, and 5 miles from Dunfermline, its post town, sprung into existence since the year 1846, owing to the establishment of the Forth Iron Works. These works have since been discontinued. At Oakley there is a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British railway. CAIRNEYHILL village is situated on the road between Alloa and Dunfermline, three miles west of the latter town; the majority of the inhabitants are employed by the manufacturers of that place. At Cairneyhill are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school. Population in 1891: Oakley, 246; Cairneyhill, 282.

SALINE is a parish and village, the latter 2½ miles n. from Oakley and 6 N.W. from Dunfermline, its post town; the parish, which extends to the borders of Perth and Clackmannanshire, is about five miles in length and four in breadth, and contains 8,189 acres. The principal pursuit of the inhabitants is agriculture. The places of worship are an Established church and a Free church, both in the village, and there is also a Board school. Oakley is the nearest railway station, 2 miles distant. Population in 1891, 879.

WEMYSS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF EAST AND WEST WEMYSS, BUCKHAVEN, METHIL, AND INNER LEVEN.

WEMYSS is a parish on the south-east side of the county, and derives its name from the Celtic word Wamb, signifying caves. The parish is bounded on the north by Kennoway and Markinch, on the south by the Firth of Forth, on the east by Scoonie, and on the west by Dysart. Its length is 6 miles east to west, and a mile and a half in breadth, the area being 4,732 acres. Within the parish is the ancient castle of Macduff, now a ruin. This massive structure crowns a height above the shore, to the east of East Wemyss, commanding a most extensive view seaward. Near Macduff's Castle are several extensive excavations at the base of the bank, which have evidently been formed by the action of the sea at a very remote period; one of these caves is called the "King's Cave," from the tradition that James V., in one of his frolics, joined an encampment of gipsies here. Some years ago Sir James Simpson discovered sculptorings on some of the walls of these caves of various animals and peculiar symbols, common on large stones in the north and east of Scotland, understood by archaeologists to be of great antiquity. In a paper read before the Royal Society of Edinburgh he described these figures as met with in no other caves but those of Wemyss. The formation of the caves themselves is a result of the extraordinary force of the sea rolling in upon this part of the Fife coast from the German Ocean. The sea has washed with great force the high rocks at this point, but their soft material, consisting of the new red sandstone, admitted of that scooping out by the force of the tides which had formed the caves. One of them, immediately under Macduff's castle, is so narrow at the mouth that it is difficult to enter, but it expands so easily to contain a hundred persons. Another near is about fifty feet in height, and formed like a fine cupola. A third, still larger, between East and West Wemyss, termed the Glass cave, was used at the end of last century for the manufacture of glass from kelp formed from the sea weed. The land generally is in an excellent state of cultivation: The minerals are ochre, ironstone, and coal, the latter being very considerable and extensively wrought. A large portion of the Wemyss estate consists of coal seams of various depths, which have been increasingly wrought of late years, and a very large quantity of coal is yet unexcavated. In West Wemyss the coal trade has considerably increased, and new pits have been opened at Muiredge, near Buckhaven, and Methil hill, where Methil harbour affords a good export. The railway trunk line skirts this parish to the west, and a branch runs along its northern border eastward to Leven. There is now a branch line from Thornton Junction running through the parish to Buckhaven and Methil. Population of the parish in 1881, 7,307.

EAST WEMYSS is a village in the parish of Wemyss, one mile N.E. from West Wemyss, 5 N.E. from Kirkcaldy, and 3 N.E. from Dysart, situated on the Firth of Forth. In this village the manufacture of linen fabrics is carried on extensively, the factory of Messrs. G. & J. Johnston containing between two and three hundred power looms; a brewery and malting house are the other branches of business. There are Free and Established churches in the village; also public and Free Church schools. Population in 1881, 846.

WEST WEMYSS is a village, a mile west from East Wemyss, 4 N.E. from Kirkcaldy, 5 S.W. from Leven, and 2 N.E. from Dysart; it is in the parish of Wemyss, and is a burgh of barony, governed by two bailies, twelve councillors, and a treasurer. The harbour is situated at its western extremity, and has several vessels belonging to it employed in the exportation of coal, which is wrought close to the harbour. A short distance east of the village, on the brink or face of an eminence, and surrounded on the land side by beautiful plantations and pleasure grounds, is Wemyss Castle, the seat of Randolph Gordon Erskine Wemyss, Esq., who is the sole proprietor of the parish, and the representative of the oldest family in the county. The lands now forming the parish of Wemyss are said to have been part of the estate of Macduff, Shakspeare's well-known "Thane of Fife." The Established church is the only place of worship. There is also a school here. Population in 1881, 1,206.

BUCKHAVEN is a village, one mile east from and in the parish of Wemyss. There is a harbour here for the accommodation of boats engaged in the fishing industry, which is considerable on this coast. The manufacture of fishing nets is carried on here to a large extent and coal is also extensively worked in the neighbourhood. Both villages are noted for their brisk pursuit of the fishing trade. There are a Free church and two for the United Presbyterians, and a large public school in the village.

METHIL, which is a village in the parish of Wemyss, is one mile east from Buckhaven. The new dock at Methil, opened 5th May, 1887, built by Randolph Gordon Erskine Wemyss, Esq., of Wemyss Castle, now the property of the North British Railway Co., and has greatly added to the prosperity of the district, large quantities of coal from the neighbouring collieries being shipped here. The dock has an area of $\frac{3}{4}$ acres, with width at entrance of 50 feet, and a depth of water at ordinary spring tides of 23 feet, and at neaps of 19 feet. It is fitted with three of Sir William Armstrong & Co.'s hydraulic hoists, each capable of loading a vessel with 2,500 tons of coal in 24 hours. There are also hydraulic cranes for working other import and export goods. The dock is connected with the main railway system of Fife, and is in direct communication with all the Fife collieries, and is lighted by electricity. There is an Established church here. A fair is held at Wemyss on the second Wednesday in September. Population in 1881, 2,952.

INNER LEVEN is a village in the parish of Wemyss. Methil is the nearest railway station, quarter of a mile distant.

FORFARSHIRE,

ORANGUS.—This county is bounded on the east by the German ocean, on the west by Perthshire, and on the north by the counties of Aberdeen and Kincardine, the latter lying also on its north eastern verge; on the south the Firth of Tay is its boundary, as likewise is Perthshire for a short distance; its extent from north to south is about thirty-eight miles, and from east to west thirty-six. The figure of this county is, perhaps, the most uniform of any in Scotland; and but for an indentation on its western side, caused by the intrusion of a part of Perthshire, it would describe almost a perfect square. The contents of its area have been variously estimated; it is stated to contain 890 square miles, or 569,840 statute acres; of these there are about three hundred thousand cultivated, and two hundred and sixty thousand uncultivated; the portion occupied by the lakes is inconsiderable. In size Forfarshire is classed as the twelfth, and in population as the fifth of the Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—The district of ANGUS (now Forfarshire), with the contiguous county of Kincardine on the north, anciently formed the country of the Horesti, and a portion of the Pictish kingdom. On the dissolution of that government by Kenneth II., about the end of the ninth century, he is said to have divided it between his two brothers, Angus and Mearns, from whom the two counties derived their appellation. The district gave the title of Earl to two different families; on the extinction of the first, the earldom was conferred on a relation of King David Bruce, and in 1477 it merged in the family of the Douglasses; it has since devolved on the Duke of Hamilton. There are a number of old ruinous castles in this county, most of which have fallen to decay, in consequence of the baronies on which they stand having passed into the hands of the proprietors of other estates.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND PRODUCE.—The great level valley of Strathmore runs through the centre of the county from east to west, and the lines of hills which flank this extensive and fine tract of country, with the Grampians on the north, and some minor ranges on the south, may be said to form this district into a series of continuous ridges, generally pursuing a direction from west to east, interrupted occasionally by the different rivers and streams coursing to the sea. The eminences of greatest altitude in the shire are—Hill of Dundee, 525 feet; Dunnichen Hill, 720; Belmont, 759; Sidlaw, 1,406; Craigowl, 1,609; Oathlaw, one of the Grampians, 2,364; and Mount-Batock, 3,465 feet above the level of the sea. The portion of the Grampian mountains in this shire is diversified by many beautiful valleys, and from the summit of these elevations to the ocean on the east, and the Tay on the south, the surface of the land may be considered an inclined plain. From the aerial region of the highest Grampian, an extensive and well varied prospect is presented, not only of almost the whole country adjoining the Tay and of the ocean, but of the eastern part of the peninsula of Fife, the coast of East Lothian, and the heights of Lammernoor. The capabilities of Forfarshire for agriculture continued for centuries in that dormant state which characterised most parts of Scotland, but it cannot escape observation at the present day, that this district is completely emancipated from the reproach of inattention to husbandry; it now exhibits a lively spirit and practically enlightened system of farming, and consequently a just appreciation of the advantages of this most useful of all sciences. The farmers of this county have kept at least equal pace in the improvements adopted with those of similarly situated divisions of the country; and the wealth of Forfarshire has been steadily increasing both from its agriculture and its manufacturing products. The general drainage of the land has been proceeded with to a great and beneficial extent; and several lochs, particularly that of Rescobie, have been drawn off for the purpose of obtaining shell-marl, which has long been in high repute with the agriculturists in their respective neighbourhoods, and the introduction of bone manure has been followed by the most gratifying results. The sowing of permanent pasture grasses and turnips is persevered in to a broad and lucrative amount; and the quantity of ground appropriated to tillage is annually increasing. Wheat and beans are also grown, but only in the more favoured localities. The improvement of live stock has been in proportionate advance with that of cultivation, and has been materially facilitated by the zealous co-operation of the various agricultural societies. The polled black Angus cattle, now less common than at one time, have given place to other breeds, and many young and lean cattle are imported from Ireland. Numbers of black-faced sheep are reared on the hills. In traversing the lower parts of the shire, beautiful enclosures and plantations meet the eye in every parish; and by the formation of excellent roads in all directions, a pleasing inducement is now held for travelling through this progressively prosperous county. The planting of waste lands seems to have made very little progress till about the middle of the last century, and when, at length, this sure source of future profit suggested itself, Scotch firs were the only sort of trees planted in such situations. More recent planters introduced the larch as a more valuable species of timber, and adapted, as they thought to every variety of soil and situation; but experience has exploded this latter notion, for it has been profitably proved that by the operation of draining the moors and waste lands produce excellent oak and beech, of which a number of proprietors have planted extensively. From the mouth of the Tay to near the Westhaven the coast is sandy, having, from thence eastward, many sunken rocks. Within a mile to the east of Arbroath the shore becomes bold and rocky, presenting dreadful precipices to the sea, perforated with caverns by the incessant and insidious workings of the waves; the "Redhead," a promontory upwards of two hundred feet in perpendicular height, is the most striking feature of this rocky front; it forms the south point of Lunan Bay, and exposes a beautiful beach to the ocean for nearly three miles. The fisheries of Forfarshire are of great importance, those of the North and South Esk, and the coast of the county, are at the present time very valuable; and the mode of packing salmon in ice, for the London market, is a practice which has proved of peculiar advantage to those connected with that branch of the fishery. Haddock, cod, ling, soles, halibut, turbot, &c., are also caught, and during July and August the fishermen are engaged in fishing for herring, of which large numbers are taken off the north-east coast.

MANUFACTURES AND MINERALS.—The manufactures of Forfar are of very high consequence; and as Fifeshire is celebrated for the production of the finer linen fabric, so is this country noted for the manufacture of the coarse hempen goods, wrought up from foreign materials; the spinning of yarn in large mills is carried on very extensively. Dundee, Arbroath and Montrose are its principal trading ports; the two first-named enjoy pre-eminence in the making of sailcloths, Osnaburgs, sackings, dowlases, and other linen textures; Brechin participates largely with other places in the preparation of flax; and the towns of Forfar, Montrose and Kirriemuir are seats of material manufacturing importance. Exclusive of these particular stations, the inhabitants of all the little towns and villages are industriously employed in weaving the already prepared materials into cloth, and in the process of bleaching. Besides the branches above mentioned, there are also many engineering works, breweries, tanneries, paper works, distilleries and starch and tobacco manufactories. This county is not distinguished for its mineral treasures. Of limestone, which is found in various parts, there are immense tracts in the Grampians; but from the expense of conveying coal to burn it, this natural product, so valuable under other circumstances, is wrought but to a limited extent, and principally in the neighbourhood of Montrose. Freestone is plentiful in almost every parish; the colour is various, but in no instance so white and beautiful as the stone of Fife or Mid-Lothian. The Arbroath paving stone is well known, and has a ready sale in London and Edinburgh. Lead has been found in several places, and was at one time wrought to a limited extent in the parish of Lochlee. But unfortunately for its local interests, this county is destitute of coal—at least no vestige of this invaluable fossil has yet been discovered; the whole district, therefore, is dependent on the Fife and Newcastle collieries for this essential article of domestic comfort and manufacturing facility. Borings for this fuel have at different times been made, but without success.

RIVERS, LOCHS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal rivers are the North and South Esk, which rise near each other on the northern confines of the county; the former originates in Loch Lee, which is filled by the water of the Lee, after being joined by the Uich, which latter forms several beautiful cascades. The tributaries of the North Esk are the Luther, the Cruick, the West Water, the Tarf, and the Mark; enriched with these streams it falls into the sea three miles from Montrose. The South Esk passes through the centre of the county, receiving in its progress the contributory waters of the Noran, the Lemno, the Cariv, and the Prosen, and enters the ocean at Montrose. The third river in point of size is the Isla, which rises near the source of the Esks; it receives, near Meigs, the Dean, the Carleet a little above Glamis, and the romantic burn of Glamis near the Castle; and, turning westward into Perthshire, it joins the Tay at Kinclaven. There are also two lesser rivers, the Dighty and the Lunan. The former proceeds from some small lakes in the parish of Lundie, and falls into the mouth of the Tay, east from Broughty Ferry; the latter conveys the waters of the lakes of Rescobie and Belgavies to the sea at Lunan Bay. The Lunan is famous for its eels, and the other rivers abound with different varieties of the trout and salmon. In the enumeration of rivers yielding wealth to this county, the Tay must not be omitted—though this district cannot claim its origin—being far the most valuable from its adaptation to the purposes of commerce. It has its source in the western extremity of Perthshire, and, after winding through delightful scenery, the beauties of which are heightened by its sparkling waters, it becomes an estuary or firth, and about eight miles below Dundee it expands into the bay of St. Andrews, and loses its distinction in the wide reservoir of the German Ocean. The lakes of most consequence are Loch Lee, in the parish of its name; Loch Brandy, in the parish of Clova; the Loch of Forfar, near that town; the Lochs of Rescobie and Lutrathen, in the respective parishes so denominated; and of Belgavies, in the parish of Aberlemno. None of these are of great magnitude—indeed few, if any, are more than a mile in extent, and there is nothing peculiar in their qualities or situations. Forfarshire is included in an extensive line of railway communication, and it may be said that every town of note in this shire is visited by a main line or branch from it.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Forfarshire comprises fifty-two complete parishes and four parts of parishes, in which are five royal and parliamentary burghs, namely, Dundee, Arbroath, Montrose, Brechin, and Forfar; the four last named burghs, with Bervie (in Kincardineshire), unite in sending one member to the Senate. Dundee, recently raised to the dignity of a city by royal charter, also returns two, and the county one; the gentleman sitting for the latter being James W. Barclay, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92, was 11,807. The Lord Lieutenant is the Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorne. By the returns presented to the Government in 1881, the county contained a population of 266,860, and by those for 1891, 277,788, showing an increase in the ten years of 11,428. The valuation of the county for 1891-92, was £200,142; railways, £69,905; waterworks, £24,454; total, £294,501.

ARBROATH,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ST. VIGEANS, ARBIRLOT, MARYWELL, AUCHMITHIE, AND COLLISTON.

ARBROATH is a royal burgh, a seaport, and the seat of a presbytery, 60 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 17 N.E. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Forfar, and 12 S. from Montrose, situated on a small plain, on the coast of the German Ocean. About a mile north-east, but locally in the parish of St. Vigeans, the coast becomes very bold, rocky and perpendicular. In the face of these cliffs are a number of caves and arches perforated by the action of the waves. They are a great attraction to visitors, having been rendered famous by Sir Walter Scott in his "Antiquary." This is a town of early origin. Previously existing as a village, it was gifted to the Abbey of Aberbrothock (founded here by William the Lion), and the abbey was erected into a burgh of regality and received a charter as a royal burgh in 1599. The remains of the abbey (founded 1178) are strikingly picturesque, and commanded the admiration of Dr. Samuel Johnson, who visited Arbroath on his journey to the Hebrides. A part of the abbot's lodgings still remains. In this house King Robert the Bruce was frequently entertained by the abbot, who was also Chancellor of Scotland. The monks first came from Kilsno, and Reginald (a monk of Tyrou), was first abbot. The abbey was very extensively endowed with lands and other gifts by Kings William I., Alexander II., and Robert I., and their nobility. It possessed forty-six parish churches, and extensive lands in several counties, particularly in the north of Scotland, with privileges of regality, &c. The abbots of this foundation had privileges which others did not enjoy—they were exempt from assisting at the yearly synods, and had the distinction of making use of and wearing the pontifical ornaments. King John conferred on the inhabitants of the place the same privileges that his subjects enjoyed throughout all England, except in his city of London. The town is situated on both banks of the river Brothock, and in the parishes of Arbroath and St. Vigeans. It contains several elegant streets, the principal business streets being High Street, Kelpie Street, and West Port, with churches, flax mills, and numerous factories. In 1812 a town house was built, and in 1855, at the rear of it, commodious market buildings were erected by the magistrates and town council, at an outlay of about £7,000. The streets have been greatly improved, by superior paving and sewerage, and by the addition of elegantly fitted and well supplied shops.

At the commencement of the eighteenth century, Arbroath had but little trade, nor did it claim any notice as a place of manufacture. Nothing was then directly imported, except a small cargo of wood occasionally from Norway; flax, iron, and other useful commodities were purchased from the merchants in Dundee and Montrose. About the year 1738, the manufacture of coarse linens was introduced by the following accident:—A weaver in the town having a small quantity of flax unfit for the kind of cloth then usually brought to market, made it into a web, and offered it to another of the inhabitants at a price by which he was willing to be the loser; the purchaser, who had previously been in Germany, remarked a similarity between this piece of cloth and the manufacture of Osnaburgh, and prevailed upon the weaver to make a trial of other webs of the same texture; the experiment succeeded—another company was established, and other parts of the county soon availed themselves of the discovery. The staple trade of Arbroath at the present day is the manufacture of sail cloth and other coarse linens; the preparation and spinning of the yarns of these productions of the loom is carried on extensively by many firms and individuals of the first respectability. Jute spinning has also been introduced, but as yet it is of small extent compared with flax spinning. The staple manufacture has been much developed during the last twenty years. In addition to the linen trade there are various concerns of magnitude, including engineering works, iron foundries, a tannery, large and flourishing boot and shoe manufactories, roperies, &c., and a good trade exists in the exportation of grain and potatoes. Considerable improvements have been made in the harbour, the principal being the conversion of the inner harbour into a wet dock. For these works a loan of £20,000 was obtained from Government, but much more than that sum was expended. As a result of this improvement, steamers of a fairly large size frequent the port, but for some years the trade of the harbour has been in a somewhat backward condition. There is a neat signal tower for communication with the Bell (or Inch Cape) Rock, which rises from the German Ocean, about twelve miles in a south-easterly direction from Arbroath. Of this rock, and the tradition attached to it, a most entertaining account will be found in Chambers' "Gazetteer," and other works. On "the rock" is a lighthouse, the first stone of which was laid in July, 1808, and the beacon first loomed over the deep on the 1st of February, 1811. At the lighthouse there are a principal lightkeeper and three assistants; each in his turn goes on shore at the expiration of every six weeks, with liberty to remain a fortnight. At the signal tower, on shore, each keeper has apartments for the accommodation of his family. The tower is about eighty feet in height and is furnished with an excellent telescope. Signals are arranged with the persons at the lighthouse on the rock by the lightkeeper on shore daily at nine morning, weather permitting. There is an attendant vessel from Arbroath engaged to go and fro in the summer time in charge of a master, but in winter the communication is by steamer from Granton. The monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by five banking establishments—branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Bank of Scotland, all accommodated in handsome buildings; there is also a bank for savings, well sustained by many provident depositors. There are good hotels, the principal being the White Hart, two news rooms, and a public library. A large public hall, with subsidiary rooms, &c., in High Street, was erected in 1866 by an incorporated company; and the parishes of Arbroath and Saint Vigeans have also erected a handsome combination poorhouse in an elevated and healthy suburb of the town.

Arbroath is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and twelve councillors. There is a guildry and a body of seven incorporated trades, but these are now virtually private bodies. The town unites with Forfar, Montrose, Brechin and Bervie, in sending one member to the Imperial Parliament, John S. Will, Esq., Q.C., being the present representative. Within the last few years Arbroath has been made the seat of a sheriff court for the district. The court sits weekly, on Wednesday, during session. Police courts are also held weekly, or oftener when necessary, and burgh and justice of peace courts are also held. There are more than twenty places of worship in the town and suburbs of Arbroath; their names, denominations and respective sites, with the ministers officiating, are given on a subsequent page. An elegant steeple, one hundred and fifty feet in height, was, about 1832, added to the parish church. There are several excellent public educational establishments, including the Arbroath High School, and several large and elegant public schools recently erected by the Burgh School Board. Two newspapers are published in the town—the Arbroath Guide and the Arbroath Herald. Railway accommodation is afforded by the Caledonian, North British, and Dundee and Arbroath Joint Lines.

The local charities of the town include the Infirmary and Dispensary, a handsome stone building, situated at High Common, and two destitute sick societies; also a number of mortifications, viz., Carmichael's, founded 1788, out of which the widows of seven shipmasters get a division half-yearly; Colville's, founded 1812, out of which £60 annually is expended on the education of ten poor children; £10 to the Scotch Episcopal clergyman; £10 to the poor of Arbroath; the like sum to the poor of St. Vigeans, and the residue to twenty poor householders; Dove's, founded in 1841, for the education of "native born boys," of poor parentage; Mrs. Renny Strachan's, which amounts to £50 yearly, to be expended in purchasing coals and oatmeal for distribution at Christmas amongst the most necessitous poor. Forbes's Fund, founded 1864, from which sums of not less than £8 nor more than £10 yearly are given for the relief of destitute widows and old unmarried females in the town of Arbroath; Gibson Fund, founded 1868; annual produce of residue of trust estate of the late William Gibson, applied as follows:—£100 to the rector of the High School for the education of eight boys, and the remainder divided yearly in sums of not less than £20 and not more than £25 among poor householders of the town of Arbroath, preference being given to respectable worthy people of fallen fortunes; Gibson Christmas Charity, 1868, annual revenue of £2,000, applied one half in purchase of coals, other half in groceries, oatmeal and clothes for distribution among the necessitous poor of the town; Gibson mortification, 1868, annual revenue of a sum of £4,000, divided yearly among sixteen poor householders of the town; a fund supposed to amount to about £2,000, bequeathed in 1875, by Mr. William Petrie, manufacturer, to be distributed in £10 shares among "poor, deserving women of respectable character, being in and belonging to, and at the time resident in the parish of St. Vigeans, and who have not been in receipt of parochial relief for the preceding five years at least;" Duncan Charity, 1869, annual profits of three-eighths of residue of the estates of the late David Duncan, for behoof of poor, aged and reduced persons, not being objects of parochial relief; Arbikie fund, bequeathed by John Mudie, of Pitmarie, being the personal estate of his sister, the late Miss Catherine Mudie, of Arbikie, to which he had succeeded, the free revenue being divided into annuities of £40 each, among deserving persons residing in the parishes of Arbroath and St. Vigeans; and Arrott's mortification, bequeathed by the late Dr. James Arrott, of Dundee, the capital sum amounting to about £6,000, and the free revenue, being annually distributed in annuities of about £6 each. The educational endowments are administered by the Arbroath Educational Trust, according to a scheme prepared by the Educational Endowment Commissioners. The market is held on Saturday, and the fairs on the last Saturday in January, for general business and hiring servants; on the 26th May, or first Saturday thereafter, for hiring; July 18th (if it fall on a Saturday, if not, on the following Saturday) for general business and hiring; and 22nd November, or first Saturday thereafter, for hiring. By the census returns for 1881, the parliamentary burgh of Arbroath contained a population of 21,758, and in 1891, 22,806.

ST. VIGEANS is a parish extending 8½ miles from east to west by 4½ in breadth, and contains the villages of ST. VIGEANS, MARYWELL, AUCHMITHIE and COLLISTON, also one half of the town of Arbroath. The first-named contains the parish church, situated about a mile from Arbroath, the others varying in distance from 2 to 3½ miles from the same town. The parish is bounded on the north and east by Inverkeilor, on the west by Arbroath, Arbiriot, and Carmyllie, and on the south by the German Ocean. Originally, it included the parish of Arbroath, disjoined after the Reformation. It was itself anciently termed Aberbrothock. The name by which it is now known is that of a famous hermit who had his chapel and hermitage at the Grange of Conan, near to which was a baronial castle, named Gory, or Gregory. From Whiting Ness, and as far as Auchmithie, the coast is very rugged and precipitous (gradually rising to Dickmontlaw Hill, 265 feet above the sea level), containing a number of caves and arches, some of which may be passed through in boats and others on foot; they are a great attraction, and much visited. The stream of the Brothock flows through the parish and passes through the town of Arbroath, entering the sea at its harbour. The parish of St. Vigeans encloses an area of 12,731 acres. Population in 1881, 14,922, and in 1891, 15,700.

ARBIRLOT parish is bounded on the south-east by the German Ocean, and extends 4 miles in length by 3 in breadth. The village is about 3 miles W. of Arbroath, situated on the east bank of the Elliot stream, from whence the name is derived, which was formerly Aber-elliot. Along the sea coast the land is sandy; inland the soil is a rich loam, capable of producing various crops. About a quarter of a mile south-west of the village stands Kelly Castle, which originally belonged to the family of Ouchterlony, and now to the Earl of Dailhousie. Arbiriot contains an Established church and manse, a Free church and manse, erected at a cost of about £1,300, and a public school. Acreage, 6,747. Population in 1881, 822, and in 1891, 848.

AUCHTERHOUSE,

WITH LUNDIE, FOWLIS EASTER, AND TEALING.

THE parish of AUCHTERHOUSE lies in the south-west corner of the county, about 7 miles N.W. from Dundee, its post town, and on the south of the Sidlaw hills, bounded on the east by Tealing, on the south-east by Maine and Strathmartine, on the south by Liff, on the west and south-west by Lundie and Fowls, on the north-west by Newtyle, and on the north and north-east by Glamis, and is a station on the Dundee and Newtyle railway. There is a parish church (erected in 1775), and a Board school. The road from Dundee to Meig (in Perthshire) passes through the parish, which comprises 5,708 acres, chiefly of arable land. Sandstone lies at or near the surface of almost the whole extent of the parish, which in 1831, contained a population of 561, and in 1891, 547.
LUNDIE parish lies in the western part of the county, and at the head of the valley of the Dighty, bounded on the north by the Sidlaw hills, which divide it from Kettins and Newtyle, on the east by Auchterhouse, and on the south and west by Fowls Easter; Admiral Lord Viscount Duncan, whose name is familiar to every reader of British history, lies interred in the churchyard of this parish. The parish of FOWLIS EASTER, in Perthshire, was united to Lundie ecclesiastically in 1618, but parochially is a separate parish. Its length is about 3 miles and its breadth a mile and a half, commanding a beautiful view of the Carse of Gowrie, near the eastern extremity of which it lies, the Firth of Tay, and the opposite shores of Fife. In point of situation, and for natural beauty and rich and varied scenery in every direction, few places can excel it. Conjointly the district forms a well-cultivated and productive tract of country, embellished with plantations and irrigated by several small lakes, of which Lundie Loch is one. The church of Fowls, which was founded by Sir Andrew Gray, for a provost and some prebendaries, is still perfectly entire, although it was built in the year 1143. The minister has succeeded in restoring both parish churches to nearly their former condition at a cost of £2,500. The parish, which comprises 7,912 acres, abounds in grey freestone of good quality, and in 1881 had a population of 628; according to the returns for 1891 this number remained unaltered.

TEALING parish situated about 6 miles N. from Dundee, its post town, and lying on the south side of the Sidlaw chain, is about 6 miles in length and 3 in breadth. It is watered by the small river Fithie, a tributary stream to the Dighty, and is bounded on the east by Marroes and on the west by Auchterhouse, and a line drawn not only along the summits of the hills above mentioned would divide the parish from Gannis on the north. In this parish are found grey slate, moorstone, and freestone. John Glass, founder of the sect appropriately designated "Glassites," was minister of Tealing anterior to his open separation from the Church of Scotland. The places of worship are the parish and a Free church, and there is also a Board school. Acreage of parish 7,927. Population in 1881, 757, and in 1891, 650.

COACHES.

To DUNDEE, from Tealing, every Tuesday & Friday, at 10 a.m. and 5.30 p.m.

BRECHIN,

WITH THE PARISH OF FARNELL.

BRECHIN is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the see of a bishop, and the capital of its parish; 10 miles N.E. from Forfar, and 70 S. by E. from Edinburgh, situated on the north bank of the Southesk, and on a branch line of the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, for which there is a station here. A new line is now (1892) being formed to connect this town with Forfar. Brechin more than once suffered by the incursions of invaders and broils of civil war; it was burnt by the Danes in 1012, and in 1645 was subjected to a similar calamity by the Marquis of Montrose; two years afterwards it was nearly depopulated by that dreadful scourge, the plague. Formerly the city was walled, but the gates have been long removed, and in the present day it exhibits the appearance of a busy manufacturing town with several excellent public buildings. In recent years the city has been much improved and modernised. Flax spinning and the manufacture of linen and a paper mill, employ numerous hands. There are also two distilleries and a brewery. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, British Linen Company Bank, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established here. There are several excellent family and commercial hotels, the principal being the Commercial, the Dalhousie, and the Crown. A newspaper, established in 1813, published on Tuesday morning, entitled the Brechin Advertiser, is conducted with much talent. The antiquity of Brechin as a royal burgh is of remote date; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, hospital master, and seven councillors, who are also police commissioners. The burgh joins with Forfar, Montrose, Arbroath, and Inverurie in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative is John Shiress Will, Esq. Q.C. A burgh or bailie court is held every Wednesday, and oftener when necessary; the magistrates are the judges. A justice of peace court is held on the first Wednesday in every month, and a sheriff court on the third Tuesday of January, March, May, July, September and November; the two last-mentioned courts are for adjudicating small debt claims.

In ancient times the Abbey of Culdees existed here; and in 1150

when Brechin was constituted as an episcopal see by David I., it is supposed that the site of this establishment was that selected for the foundation of the Cathedral. An interesting fragment remains of the hospital of Maison Dieu, founded by William Brechin in 1264. The cathedral of St. Ninian, which now forms the parish church, stands on the north verge of a precipitous ravine, which separates the burgh lands from those of Brechin Castle; it was originally a stately Gothic structure, but its architectural symmetry has been materially injured by the injudicious taste displayed in modern repairs. The length is 116 feet and the breadth 61 feet; the steeple is a square erection, 70 feet in height, surmounted by an hexagonal spire of 50 feet. The cathedral of Brechin was one of the few places of worship in which the service of the liturgy was for some time performed without interruption after its promulgation in 1637. The bishop was a man of singularly strong and daring character, and ascended the pulpit with a pair of pistols under his gown, determined to carry the behests of royalty into execution at whatever risk. The places of worship are the parish church (cathedral), East parish church, two Free churches, and three United Presbyterian, a Scotch Episcopal, Roman Catholic, and Evangelical Union chapels, and a meeting House in Bank Street for Plymouth Brethren. Contiguous to the cathedral stands the round tower of Brechin, similar to those in Ireland. It is supposed to have been erected about the year 1010; it is built of freestone, 85 feet in height to the cornice, and 25 feet more to the pinnacle of a modern spire. It has several windows—four in particular, at the top, facing the cardinal points. The entrance to the tower is by a door 5 feet from the ground, on the outside; the whole edifice has been repaired by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and new wooden ladders erected. Numerous figures in an antique style of carving and a rude representation of the crucifixion, are the surrounding ornaments to the door. The diameter of the tower at the bottom is 16 feet. Formerly there were two small bells in it, which were removed to the large steeple, where they now hang. Between the town and the river, and only separated from the former by the ravine before mentioned, stands Brechin Castle, an ancient seat of the Maules of Panmure, now represented by the Earl of Dalhousie; it is built on a precipitous rock overhanging the stream. It sustained a siege of twenty days in 1303 from the English army under Edward I., but Sir Thomas Maule, its commander, being killed, it surrendered. The south front, towards the river, consists of some remains of the original structure, with some more recent erections, including a handsome square tower; the west front is formed with regularity, in the style of the seventeenth century, with round towers at the angles. Brechin has the advantage of numerous educational seminaries, and these have stimulated even the humble classes to the acquisition of knowledge. One of the chief architectural ornaments of the town is the Mechanics' Institution, containing an excellent library, reading room and billiard club. The front is in the Tudor style, with castellated parapet ornamented with pinnacles; a fine tower rises in the centre to the height of eighty or ninety feet, from the summit of which there is an enchanting prospect. This elegant structure was erected at the sole cost of the late Lord Panmure, who also presented to the institution numerous valuable paintings, which grace the fine hall of the Institution. His Lordship's munificence also granted £1,000 to be vested at interest, which yields about £40 a year, and is appropriated to enriching the library with books and the support of courses of lectures; and the subscribers are entitled to the benefit of the whole, for a very small payment annually. A very handsome building for the Young Men's Christian Association has been erected in Bank street at a cost of £1,500, and was opened in 1878, the money being raised by public subscriptions. Also in the same year was erected the Almshouse, on the hill in Infirmary street, at a cost of £3,000. The Infirmary, near the beautifully situated cemetery, was built in 1869, and has proved a valuable acquisition to the city. By the gift of an anonymous donor of £5,000 a Public Library has been erected. It is a fine building and occupies a prominent site near the railway station. A public park, opened in 1887, is situated in Park road. This town has given birth to more men of genius and literary distinction than any place, in proportion to its size, in Scotland, among whom may be enumerated Maitland, the laborious historian of Edinburgh and London; Dr. Gillies, the historian of Greece; his brother, Lord Adam Gillies, Dr. Thomas Guthrie, and Colvin Smith, the eminent artist to whom Sir Walter Scott sat on five different occasions, and numerous others. Trinity Muir, one mile north of the town, besides being the site of several great fairs, is resorted to by cricket and golf players during the summer. The weekly market is held on Tuesday. The sheep, cattle, and horse fair (on Trinity Muir), which commences on the second Wednesday in June, and continues for three days, was wont to be the largest in Scotland. "Croft" markets, for cattle, are held in the town, and horse markets, also, towards the end of February and beginning of March. These markets, however, are of minor importance now, as a local company conducts weekly a very extensive sale of cattle, &c. at their auction mart, with special sales at frequent intervals. Brechin parish embraces an area of 14,313 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 10,499, the town containing 9,031; in 1891 the population of the parish was 10,453 and of the town 8,592.

FARNELL is a parish 4 miles S.S.E. from Brechin, its post town, and 6½ S.W. from Montrose; it is about three miles in length and two in breadth, bounded on the north by Brechin, on the south by Rossie Muir, on the east by Maryton, and on the west by Kinnell and Brechin. Kinnaird Castle, the family seat of the Earl of Southesk, is acknowledged to be one of the most superb seats of the Scottish nobility, and is built in the style of a French chateau; it contains a good collection of paintings, and has an imposing and princely appearance, with its beautiful grounds and other ornamental appendages, being situated in a deer park of about 1,800 acres in extent. Acreage, 5,703; population in 1891, 618, and in 1891, 627.

BROUGHTY-FERRY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF MONIFIETH AND MURROES, AND THE HAMLETS OF BARNHILL AND NEWBIGGING.

BROUGHTY-FERRY is a considerable modern town and police burgh, seated on the Firth of Tay, about 4 miles E. from Dundee, nearly opposite to Ferry-Port-on-Craig, or Tarport, and on the Dundee and Arbroath railway. The place takes its name from the old ruined castle of Broughty or Burgh Tay (the defence of the Tay, situated on its south-eastern extremity), on a rocky eminence jutting into the water. The castle, formerly in ruins, has been made into a formidable defence for the mouth of the Tay. Broughty is divided into two districts, EAST FERRY and WEST FERRY—the former is in the parish of Monifieth, and the latter in that of Dundee; it is regularly built, and has improved very considerably during the last few years, having become the place of residence of many of the principal bankers and merchants of Dundee, whose pleasant houses and cottages are thickly scattered on the hill side. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and a Savings Bank are established here. The town is governed by commissioners of police and police magistrates, under the provisions of the Police Act of 1862. At one time the East Ferry comprised only a few fishermen's huts, built along the beach; the population is now considerable, while people from various parts of the country visit it during the summer months to enjoy its pleasant scenery, pure air, and for the sake of its excellent bathing accommodation. There are no public works here, the inhabitants consisting of fishermen, tradesmen, and private residents. A new pier and harbour were constructed in 1871 at a cost of about £3,500, projecting in the river about 200 feet due south, with a width of 30 feet. At the outer end of the pier is a wooden platform and slip, supported on piles secured and braced together by horizontal and diagonal timbers, forming an angle running eastward in the direction of the North British railway pier, which gives it a semi-dock like appearance. There is berthage for four or five small vessels. The slip is of a uniform breadth of 20 feet, running from the top of the pier down to low water, partly under the platform at a gentle declination; this arrangement will accommodate vessels at low water, and the landing and embarking of passengers from small steamers at any state of tide. Storehouse, office, and steelyard have also been added. About half a mile to the north of Broughty Ferry is Fort-hill, on which fortifications were erected by the English in 1548, during the reign of Henry VIII., and regency of the Earl of Arran, when they ravaged Dundee and the surrounding country; in 1550 the works on this hill being surrendered to an allied army of Scots, Germans, and French, under M. Des Thermes, were dismantled, and at the present day they present merely shattered relics, the plough having occasionally been driven over a part of the ground which they once covered. There are ten places of worship—two Established, three Free, two United Presbyterian, one Episcopal, one Independent, and one Baptist. The East Free church built in 1865, is a very handsome Gothic structure. There are also four Board schools. Besides these there is a secondary or collegiate school, and a few ladies' schools. There are also two Public Halls. The Broughty Ferry Guide newspaper is published every Friday by Messrs. J. & C. Simpson. Population of the town in 1881, 5,487, and in 1891, 10,000.

MONIFIETH is a parish lying on the shore of the Firth of Tay, extending inland about 4½ miles from south to north, and the breadth from 1½ to 3½ miles, embracing 5,932 acres. It is bounded on the south by the Firth of Tay, and on the east by the parishes of Barry and Monikie, on the north by Monikie, and on the west by Murroes and Dundee. The name is understood to be derived from the Gaelic appellation of Monifuth or the "stag moss." The village of Monifieth is situated about 2 miles E. from Broughty-Ferry, on a brae with a southern exposure, and within a short distance of the sea. It contains some very fine villas, a machine works, and a large jute spinning mill. It has a parish and two Free churches. The parish church, though plain in appearance, is a conspicuous edifice, surrounded by a burying ground, containing a variety of finely-carved antique tombstones. There are also two Board schools. There is a station in the village, on the Dundee and Arbroath joint line of railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 9,521, and in 1891, 10,531.

BARNHILL, 1 mile E. from Broughty-Ferry, in the same parish, and now included in that burgh, is a station on the Dundee and Forfar direct line, which has facilitated the opening out of this locality, and has now become a favourite place of residence. Here is a Convalescent Home in connection with the Dundee Royal Infirmary, erected in 1876, and opened in March, 1877, from funds left by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart.

NEWBIGGING is a small hamlet in the parish of Monikie, about 7 miles N.E. of Dundee (its post town). It contains a United Presbyterian church, a very neat building, also a Board school. Population returned with the parish.

MURROES, a parish in the southern part of the county, is 8 miles in length by 2 in breadth, bounded by Dundee and Mains on the south, Monifieth on the east, Mains and Tealing on the west, and Inverarity and Monikie on the north, lying on the road from Brechin to Dundee, its post town, from which latter it is about 5 miles N.E. distant. The greater part of the parish is arable, and it is adorned with some plantations. There are quarries producing quantities of pavement and other kinds of stone. The parish church is the only place of worship, and there is a public school, with a house adjoining for the master. The nearest railway station is at Kingennie, on the Dundee and Forfar line of railway. Acreage, 5,998. Population in 1881, 749, and in 1891, 790.

CARNOUSTIE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BARRY, MONIKIE, PANBRIDE, MUIRDRUM, NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, AND EAST AND WEST HAVEN:

CARNOUSTIE is a thriving police burgh, post town and station on Dundee and Arbroath Joint railway, in the parish of Barry. It is a pleasant sea bathing place, situated on the east coast of the German ocean, about 10 miles E. from Dundee, and 7 s.w. from Arbroath, and is much resorted to in the summer months by visitors from Dundee and other parts of Scotland. Since the introduction of a supply of pure water, and a thorough system of drainage, it is considered one of the best seaside resorts on the east coast. The village is well supplied with gas. There are several handsome villas, and many respectable lodging houses and some good hotels, also the large jute manufactory of Messrs. Smieton & Sons, who employ upwards of 400 hands; an extensive vitriol works and boot and shoe works. Its golf links are second only to St. Andrews, and have recently become very popular. There are branches of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland and a Savings Bank. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and others for the Free, United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and an Episcopal church. There are also public schools. Population in 1881, 9,921, and in 1891, 4,186.

BARRY, or BARRIE, is a parish bounded on the north and west by Monikie and Monifeth, on the east by Panbride, on the south by the German Ocean and the Firth of Tay; extending about 8 miles from east to west, and 4 from north to south. The village is 9 miles E. from Dundee, and not quite that distance south-west from Arbroath, on the road from the latter town to Broughty Ferry, and contains the parish church, a Free church, and a public school. The southern half of the parish is generally sandy, and used principally for the grazing of sheep and cattle; the northern half contains many large farms, all of them in the highest state of cultivation. In 1892 the Government acquired, at a cost of £48,000, the extensive links in this parish as a training ground for military purposes. Its artillery range is one of the best land ranges in Britain, and the ground is otherwise very suitable for manoeuvres, rifle practice and encamping, it being easy of access by rail and water. The Dundee and Arbroath railway has a station near the village. At BUDDONNESS, on the southern extremity of the parish are two lighthouses, and close by is a lighthouse to guide vessels on their entrance into the Tay. The parish of Barry comprises an area of 5,328 statute acres and in 1881 had a population of 3,238, and in 1891, 3,795.

MONIKIE is a parish 7 miles in length by 5 in breadth, having an area of 8,921 statute acres, bounded on the south by the parishes of Barry and Monifeth, 9 miles N.E. from Dundee, 6 N.E. from Broughty Ferry, and about 5 N.W. from Carnoustie (its post town). There is a station here on the Dundee and Forfar section of the Caledonian railway. The land is well cultivated, much of the produce being required for the Dundee market. Whinstone, freestone, sandstone, and pavement stone abound in the parish. It contains the parish church, a Free church, and a church at the village of NEWBIGGING for the United Presbyterians, there are also public schools. About half a mile south of the parish church, on the hill of Downie, stands a monument 105 feet in height, which was erected in 1839, during the lifetime of the late Lord Pamphure, by his tenantry, as a testimonial for the many favours they had received at his hands. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,412, and in 1891, 1,328.

PANBRIDE is a parish which joins Barry and Monikie on the west, Carmylie on the north, and Arbriol on the north-east, it runs about 4½ miles inland from the German Ocean, and in width is about 2 miles, embracing an area of 5,199 statute acres. It contains the village of MUIRDRUM and NEWTON OF PANBRIDE, the last being now considered as forming part of Carnoustie, from which it is divided by the Lochty burn. A mile further to the east are the Panbride Bleach Works, belonging to Mr. J. E. Dickson. In the northern part stands the house of Pamphure, with its extensive enclosures and plantations. The parish is watered by a streamlet that runs through a valley called Battie's Den, over which is thrown a high bridge on the turnpike road from Dundee to Arbroath. The inhabitants are principally engaged in fishing and agricultural pursuits. The coast is flat and rocky, but has two open harbours at the fishing villages of East and West Haven. At the former is a station on the Dundee and Arbroath railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,395, and in 1891, 1,600.

DUNDEE,

WITH THE PARISH OF MAINS AND STRATHMARTINE, AND THE VILLAGES OF DOWNFIELD, INVERGOWRIE (OR MYLNEFIELD), AND LONGFORGAN (PERTHSHIRE.)

DUNDEE is an important royal burgh and seaport, on the north bank of the Firth of Tay, about nine miles from its mouth. It is the second town in point of commercial importance, and the third in respect of population in Scotland, and is now a city, having been raised to that position by Royal Charter. The parish is bounded on the south by the Tay; on the north by the united parishes of Mains and Strathmartine; on the east by Murrumbidgee and Monifieth; and on the west by the united parishes of Liff and Benzie, a large portion of which is incorporated with the burgh. The city is 43 miles N. from Edinburgh, 65 s.w. from Aberdeen, 39 s.w. from Montrose, 23 E. by N. from Perth, 17 s.w. from Arbroath, and 14 s. from Forfar. The Caledonian and North British railways have each stations in the city. The Caledonian railway system connects Dundee with Perth, Stirling and the west of Scotland generally, and London and the south by the West Coast lines. One branch runs northward to Newtyle, Blairgowrie, and Alyth, and another branch goes direct to Forfar, the county town. The Caledonian are joint owners with the North British Company of the Dundee and Arbroath railway, which connects Dundee with Arbroath, Montrose, Aberdeen, and the whole north-east of Scotland. The North British has running powers for a certain distance over the east and west lines, and has joint right in part of both the terminal stations—one situated at the east and the other at the west end of Dock street. It has also constructed the Arbroath and Montrose direct line, which greatly increases the facilities for communication between Dundee and the south-eastern portion of Forfarshire and the south-western portion of Kincardineshire. In 1870 the North British Railway Company obtained an Act of Parliament for bridging the Tay at Dundee. The bridge was designed by Sir Thomas Bouch, the Company's engineer, the plans being for a single line of rails only. Work was commenced in June, 1871, but in the course of construction various drawbacks were encountered, the greatest of these being the unexpected differences in the nature of the river bottom, which rendered a modification of the original plan necessary, cast-iron piers having to be substituted for brick piers in the larger portion of the structure. After considerable delay, the bridge was completed and opened for traffic on the 31st of May, 1878. It was for his services in connection with this undertaking that Mr. Bouch was shortly afterwards knighted. The bridge was 10,612 feet in length, and consisted of 85 spans, some of these being over 90 feet above high water level, and the cost was said to be £350,000. Unfortunately, in designing the structure, sufficient allowance was not made for the force of the hurricanes which occasionally sweep down the valley of the Tay, and on the evening of the 28th December, 1879, during the prevalence of a gale of unusual force, while the mail train from Edinburgh was passing over it, the whole of the "high girders," extending over fourteen spans, were blown into the river, together with the train, leaving a gap of 3,000 feet. Upwards of seventy persons perished with the train. During the short time the bridge was available for the train service, its great advantage as a link in connection with the railway accommodation between the north-north-east of Scotland and the south was clearly demonstrated. It was also seen that the direct and easy communication opened up with the Fife coal fields would come to be of immense benefit, both to the railway company and the trade of Dundee. These considerations led the North British directors to take steps to restore the means of communication, and ultimately it was decided to build a new bridge, and the plans by Mr. Barlow were approved by Parliament in May, 1881. The new bridge has a double line of rails, and is some ten feet lower at the extreme height than the wrecked bridge. It is expected that sufficient allowance has been made in the new structure to meet the enormous lateral pressure of the severest gales. The spans are 85 in number, nearly corresponding to those of the former bridge, and the total length of the viaduct from the Fife shore to the brick arches on the north side is 10,545 feet 6 inches, or within a few feet of two miles long. The contractors, Messrs. Arrol and Company, of Glasgow, introduced several ingenious contrivances for facilitating the work during construction, the most noticeable being pontoons on legs, known as "quadrupeds," which enabled the piers to be sunk independent of tides and storms, and a hydraulic riveting machine. The massive character of the new structure contrasts very favourably with the ruins of the old bridge, the piers of which alone are standing. It was opened for general traffic in June, 1887, and public confidence in its stability is entire; its vibration, even with the passing of the heaviest trains, being almost imperceptible.

The situation of Dundee is very beautiful. The river here forms a bay two miles broad, from the margin of which the town spreads itself over a gradual acclivity, ascending towards the base of a lofty and sheltering eminence called "Dundee Law." The picturesque coast of Fife-shire forms the southern border of the Tay, and a steam ferry-boat effects frequent communication between the opposite shores of the estuary. Dundee is a place of considerable antiquity. From a fishing hamlet it came to be a walled town, with a castle of considerable strength. It was created a royal burgh by William I. in 1164, this privilege, according to tradition, having been obtained by David, Earl of Huntingdon, who, after escaping the perils of shipwreck, landed at this place on his return from the crusade. During the usurpation of Edward I., the town was made the station of an English garrison; and in the course of the struggle for the Scottish crown between that prince (nominally on behalf of Balliol) and Robert Bruce, Dundee was taken and re-taken twice. The patriot Wallace, whose deeds have kindled the enthusiasm of bard and historian, received his education at the Grammar School of Dundee. When at school Wallace was mixed up in a quarrel with the English governor's son, and having killed him had to seek safety in flight. The castle of Dundee becoming so formidable an annoyance when in possession of an enemy, an occurrence but too frequent, Bruce deemed it expedient to demolish it, and not a vestige of it now remains. Its site was near the present Castle street—that street having been formed by blasting a portion of the rock on which it stood. The town was destroyed in the reign of Richard II. of England, and it suffered a similar infliction when Edward VI. sat upon the English throne; but on each occasion it speedily recovered, and resumed its rank among the principal Scottish towns, several times being pledged as security for ransoms, and for the fulfilment of treaties. It was also a place of royal residence, there being a palace to the south of the Nethergate, and a mint at the foot of the Overgate, the site of which is still indicated by the name of "Mint Close," given to an entry in that quarter. Robert III. was the first sovereign who struck coin at the mint. The oldest charter that Dundee can boast of is one granted by Robert Bruce, recognizing the burghal privileges conferred by William the Lion, brother to the Earl of Huntingdon, mentioned above. In this place the reformed religion found some of its earliest and warmest defenders. So zealous was the town in its cause, as to be honoured with the appellation of "the second Geneva." In 1544 George Wishart, who suffered martyrdom at St. Andrews, preached here, and on one occasion narrowly escaped assassination at the hands of one of Cardinal Beaton's emissaries. The occasion was a sermon preached by Wishart, from the East Port, during the plague—the plague-stricken being outside the wall. In memory of the event, the East Port, the only portion of the old walls extant, is still kept standing, although it cannot be called either ornamental or useful. In April, 1645, the Duke of Montrose took Dundee by assault, the inhabitants suffering severely in the carnage which ensued. The last calamity of this kind that befell this town was its capture and plunder a few years later, by General Monk. This event is the subject of many local traditions. In connection with this short historical sketch we may mention a few eminent names that have conferred honour on Dundee, from its being the place hither of their birth, education or labour;—Hector Boece, the historian; Sir William Wallace; John Blair; Goldman and Ferguson, the poets; Sir George Mackenzie, the scholar and lawyer; and in more recent days, Drs. Small, Willison, Davidson, and Russell; Nicoll the poet; George Gillilan the critic and preacher; Dr. Thomas Dick, the astronomer and christian philosopher; and the naval victor, Admiral Duncan. The author of the "Song of the Shirt" also resided in the town for a short time, and some of his first efforts at versifying appeared in the columns of the Dundee Advertiser.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.—Dundee is a place of great commercial activity, and is the principal seat of the linen and jute manufactures. The rapid increase, both of its productions and shipping, is the most striking feature of its recent history. When Monk captured the place in 1651, sixty vessels were found in the harbour, so richly laden as to afford a booty to the captors exceeding in value the whole of their spoils "in the wars throughout the three nations." The plunder, however, did not enrich the captors, for the ships sunk in passing the bar. This heavy blow crushed the rising commerce of the town, and for several years few vessels floated in the deserted harbour. In 1669, however, thirty-seven vessels arrived in the port; in 1673, forty-nine; in 1680, eighty-five; but in 1731 the number had considerably decreased, and the trade continued to dwindle till this once flourishing port was resorted to chiefly by fishermen and smugglers. But from the situation of Dundee, the commodiousness of its harbour, and the enterprise of its inhabitants, such a state of matters could not last always. The tide of commerce turned, and once more set into the forsaken haven. In 1745 the port dues scarcely amounted to £1,200; but in 1792 the number of vessels belonging to the town had increased to 116, measuring 8,550 tons; and about the same period the foreign clearances outwards and inwards were nearly 12,000 tons, while the coasting trade was about 60,000. Since 1815, when the harbour was placed under new management, the increase has been enormous, and the total revenue from all sources from that date until May, 1887, amounted in the aggregate to £2,570,414. During the year ending May, 1891, the revenue amounted to £79,408; in the year ending May, 1861, it was only £25,329. The augmentation of its shipping gave an impulse to improvement; new sea walls and quays were built, the tidal harbour was extended, wet docks and graving docks were constructed, and such undertakings were effected that there are but few ports in Great Britain which afford greater facilities and accommodation for shipping. In 1815 the management of the harbour was placed in the hands of Commissioners appointed annually under an Act of Parliament; but by an Act passed in June, 1830, the management was transferred to trustees to be elected annually; the provost, bailies, and dean of guild to be perpetual trustees, in virtue of their office. The harbour is well managed, and the extensions rendered necessary by the increased business of the port are pushed rapidly forward. The total expenditure for constructing and maintaining the harbour from July, 1815, to May 31, 1887, inclusive of interest on debt and sinking fund, was £2,570,414. The total cost of harbour and property up to date amounted to £922,810. The debt due by the Dundee Harbour on the 31st May, 1891, amounted to £368,922. The progressive increase of revenue will appear from the following statement:—

The number of vessels belonging to the port in 1891 was 172, of the aggregate register of about 128,369 tons. The whale fishery employs several ships from this port, all fitted with screw propellers. Steam navigation is successfully conducted by the Dundee, Perth, and London Shipping Company, whose vessels ply to London twice a week, and to Hull weekly. These steamships have obtained a high character for swiftness and excellent accommodation. There is also regular steam communication with Newcastle and Liverpool, besides several large steamers engaged exclusively in the coal trade. Direct steam communication is carried on with New York at irregular intervals. The earliest articles manufactured in the town seem to have been soap and glass, which engaged a great number of hands; and the brewing of ale was carried on to some extent. The glass manufacture has died out, as has also the sugar refining, which was once carried on. In 1866, however, a new branch of manufacture—that of linseed crushing—was established, and has since been carried on to a moderate extent. The manufacture of shoe uppers by the sewing machine was introduced by Messrs. Henderson (whose tanning and leather works are on a very extensive scale), some years ago, and has been very successful. The wholesale shoe trade, which at one time flourished in this town, has been recently revived. There are two large manufactories, employing a considerable number of persons, and there is every reason to believe that the trade has taken firm root in the place. The manufacture of marmalade has for many years employed a large number of hands, Dundee marmalade being famous throughout the world. Messrs. Keiller and Sons' establishment is probably the largest in the kingdom, and there are other firms extensively engaged in the trade. The business of building ships flourished at an early period, and such an occupation soon led to the manufacture of cordage, which still remains a branch of commerce, but not to such an extent as formerly.

The manufacture of cotton was once tried, and had the appearance of forming an important branch in the trade of Dundee, having at one time seven companies engaged in it; but at length it declined, and finally died away, in favour of Glasgow. The manufacture of woollen cloths was next attempted, but met with no success. Out of these failures arose a spirit for manufacturing goods from flax; and as an encouragement to this branch in its infancy, a bounty was given by the Government on all linen exported, and a heavy duty laid on the importation of foreign linens. Whatever the effect of these enactments, the trade of Dundee continued to increase, and since the introduction of the jute manufacture, the progress of the city has been very great. The following returns of the quantities of flax, &c. imported in various years since 1745 will show the progress of the flax trade:—

Jute was first brought under the notice of Dundee manufacturers by the late Thomas Neish, Esq. As the fibre was hard and difficult to work, it did not attract much attention at first. With improved machinery, however, and the discovery of the means of softening the fibre, jute gradually grew more in favour, until the outbreak of the civil war in America, and though causing a stoppage of the cotton supply, gave the trade an impetus which has since gone on increasing, owing to the cheapness at which cloth can be produced from the fibre, and its usefulness for various important purposes. At first the fibre was imported in small quantities to London and Liverpool, and thence trans-shipped to Dundee. As the trade grew in importance, however, manufacturers began to import direct from Calcutta, and the direct imports now greatly exceed the importation into London. Most of the jute received in Liverpool and London also finds its way to Dundee. In 1849, the imports (exclusive of coast-ways), amounted to 8,176 tons; in 1850, 8,127 tons were received. In 1865, the receipts at the harbour, both coast-ways and from Calcutta, reached 36,291 tons. Since then the importation has gone on in an increasing ratio. To give an idea of the expansion of the trade, we give the following returns for the years ending 31st May 1871, 1876, 1881, 1886, and 1889:—

from London)	88,184. 21,637. 29,644. 5,585. 10,875
Total	84,297. 106,727. 152,468. 142,305. 238,919

Other imports from foreign countries to which attention may be directed are timber and whale and seal blubber, the former being about 50,000 loads annually, and the latter varying of course according to the success or failure of the fishing, but probably averaging not less than 2,500 tons each season. The oil produced from this blubber is chiefly used for "batching" the jute in its raw state, in order to soften the fibre, and facilitate the various operations of preparing and spinning. The exports of manufactured goods from the harbour by no means represent the extent of business done in the town, the larger portion of the manufactured goods being sent by rail to Glasgow and Liverpool for export to the United States, South America, Australia, &c. The total quantity of linen and jute goods sent by rail from the town in the year 1868 was 71,400 tons; in 1869, 75,570 tons; in 1875, 72,518 tons, and in 1884, 76,288 tons. Two years ago Dundee was also licensed as a cattle port. Extensive wharf accommodation was provided at Carolina Port for that purpose, and a great trade has since been done in the importation of Canadian cattle. During the past few years the staple trade of the town, in sympathy with the general trade of the country, has been in a very depressed condition. Fifty years ago there were only four steam spinning mills; there are now probably above one hundred, including spinning and weaving factories. The various productions from flax, hemp and jute, as has been stated, form the staple trade of the town. The raw materials are imported chiefly from Russia, Prussia, Holland and India; these are spun by steam power into thread, which, after being bleached, are woven into osanburghs, sheetings, baggings, sailcloth, sacking, dowlas, &c. During the year 1850 the trade of Dundee became animated by augmenting briskness, showing that free trade had increased the prosperity of this important port. At the commencement of the civil war in America, as has been said, the trade of Dundee increased to a most extraordinary extent, fabrics of jute and linen being in great demand to take the place of cotton. Almost every mill received additions, and a large number of new mills were erected. The manufacture of machinery, steam engines, boilers, and millwright work is in a flourishing condition and carried on extensively by several eminent firms, among whom may be mentioned Messrs. Carmichael & Co. Ward Foundry; Thomson, Son & Co., Douglas Foundry; Urquhart, Lindsay & Co., Blackness Foundry; W. B. Thompson & Co., Limited, Lilybank and Tay Foundries; Gourlay, Brothers & Co., Dundee Foundry; and Robertson & Orchard, Wallace Foundry. Iron ship building and marine engineering are also important features in the general prosperity and industry of the city, and give employment to a large number of artisans. Messrs. Gourlay Brothers & Co., Alexander Stephen & Sons, and W. B. Thompson & Co., Limited, are the principal firms engaged in these important industries. There are also several extensive saw mills and timber yards, the principal of which belong to Messrs. Bell & Sime, and Messrs. Fleming & Barry.

DESCRIPTIVE SKETCH OF DUNDEE.—Although Dundee is not conspicuous for architectural beauty, it contains several handsome streets. The city is illuminated with gas, the manufacture of which is in the hands of the Corporation. Steps are also now (1892) being taken to illuminate the central portion of the city with the electric light. The water supply is also in the same hands, the principal source being the Loch of Lintathem and the river Melgum. The greater part of the mansions of the opulent are ranged on the lofty bank of the Tay, westward of the town. This situation commands a view of the river and the beautiful scenery on the opposite coast. In the central part of the city is a wide oblong area, called the High street, on the south side of which stands the Town House, comprising the Guild Hall, Court Room, and appropriate offices, together with repositories for the town records. The Town House was finished in 1734, from a plan of the elder Adams. The front is handsome, beneath which is a piazza; and from the centre of the building rises a lofty spire, 140 feet high. A large addition has been made to the building, with the view of accommodating all the public offices, but they are at present somewhat scattered. A little to the east of the High street, rises the lofty and elegant spire of St. Paul's Episcopal church. This beautiful church is built on the Castle hill, near to the site of the ancient castle. It is in the Gothic style, from designs of Sir Gilbert Scott, and the spire has been fitted up with a peal of bells, the gift of various members of the congregation. To the zeal and cultivated taste of the late Bishop Forbes the town owes this addition to its architectural beauties. An elegant building has been erected by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, at the east end of High street, in connection with the improvements carried out by the corporation in that quarter. New Commercial street is a splendid thoroughfare, lined on either side by elegant shops and houses, and the old narrow dingy Murraysgate and Seagate have given place to wide streets. A street with superb and highly ornate buildings, is also at present (1892) in the course of formation, from the Nethergate southwards. At the lower end it curves semi-circularly towards South Union street on the west, and Green market on the east. The Gilliland Memorial Hall occupies a fine site facing the north, in the centre of this curve. This building is occupied for worship by the congregation of the Rev. David Macrae. It is also frequently used for holding concerts and meetings on week evenings, for which purpose it is admirably adapted. This street has been named Whitehall street, after the ancient Whitehall Palace, which was situated here, and its formation has caused the destruction of a great number of squalid and ungainly tenements which previously occupied its site. The Public Hall, in Bank street (for which the inhabitants of Dundee are mainly indebted to Lord Kinnaird) is an excellent addition to the public buildings of this town. It is in the Anglo-Italian style of architecture, and its interior is plain, but bold and massive in detail. Above the entrance lobbies, and projecting into the hall, is a gallery capable of accommodating about 200 people seated comfortably. On the right and left of the entrances are small retiring rooms. The hall itself is a spacious apartment, 130 by 60 feet, and 42 feet 6 inches high, and capable of accommodating about 2,500 people. In 1864 a movement was made for a public organ to improve the hall, and £1,500 was subscribed for the purpose. The organ was inaugurated on the 5th October, 1865, by a grand performance of Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," by the Dundee Cecilia Society. The orchestra in front of the organ can accommodate some 280 performers. Immediately opposite the Kinnaird Hall stands an elegant and imposing building, 215 feet in length and four storeys in height, with a sunk floor containing printing machinery, &c. the printing establishment of the Dundee Advertiser, & the People's Journal, Evening Telegraph, and People's Friend. This is probably one of the best equipped newspaper printing offices in the country. On the ground floor, the publishing and business departments are conveniently situated; the second floor is mainly devoted to the accommodation of the editorial, reporting and literary staff, and job printing; and on the third floor is the newspaper composing department, a large room 103 feet long by 35 feet wide, and 28 feet from floor to ceiling, and the stereotyping, lithographing and bookbinding departments. A direct telegraph wire connects the establishment with a branch office in Fleet street, London, and by this means long special reports of parliament, stock exchange business, and other important matters are daily supplied to the readers of this paper. On a commanding site in Lindsay street the premises of the Dundee Courier are situated. These buildings, which were only erected a few years ago to provide for an increasing business, are of a chaste and striking architectural design. The front edifice is occupied by the commercial, warehouse, publishing, reporting and editorial departments. Behind the main building the composing and machine departments are accommodated in a handsome two-storey structure, which contains nearly 10,000 feet of floor space. They are lofty, well-lighted, and finely ventilated apartments, and are admitted by newspaper men who have visited them from all quarters to be amongst the finest rooms of the kind in the country. Looking up Reform street, an elegant edifice with chaste Doric columns meets the eye. This is the High School, erected in 1834, at a cost of £10,000, since which extensive additions have been made to it, one of the latest being a gymnasium and workshop. A spacious and elegant structure, containing class rooms for girls has also been erected on a site acquired on the opposite side of Euclid street. These schools now rank with the best in the country for accommodation and efficiency. The curriculum includes all the branches embraced in what is known as a liberal education. On the modern side the pupils are trained for commercial life, whilst on the classical side they receive an education which fits them to enter the universities, with the advantage of being well grounded in literature, science, and the ancient and modern languages. The institution is largely indebted to the late ex-Bailie Harris, who gave £20,000 for the purpose of improving it. Miss Harris, sister of the above, has also been a great benefactor to the school. Besides the above munificent bequest to the High Schools, Mr. Harris bequeathed the sum of £10,000 for the erection of a building which has been named after him—the Harris Academy—at which secondary education and the elements of science are taught by a very efficient staff. Since its opening, this institution has proved a splendid addition to the educational facilities of the town. In addition to the above there are numerous public schools and many private educational establishments. A large new building, called the Albert Institute, has been erected to the south-east of the school, the western portion from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott, and the eastern portion from those by Mr. Mackenzie, an able local architect. The cost of the entire building was about £25,000, exclusive of the site, which cost £8,000. The building comprises a public hall, library, reading room, and museum. The design is decorated Gothic, with a grand staircase on the west front. The library, reading room, and museum are free to the public, the town having some years ago adopted the Free Libraries Act. A great addition in the same style of architecture has been recently erected on the north; this has been named the Victoria Art Gallery, and was opened with great eclat by Mr. Gladstone, on Oct. 29th, 1890. In the grounds in front of the Albert Institute a statue of George Kinnloch, the first representative of the burgh in the first reformed Parliament, has been placed. It is cast in bronze, and does great credit to the artist, Mr. Steell, Edinburgh. In the south-west corner of the grounds, a bronze statue of Burns, also by Steell, has been placed. There is also a statue, in the same grounds, of the late Mr. Carmichael, the inventor of the fan blast. A fountain, which was erected at considerable cost, but which, in the opinion of many, is not all that can be desired, faces the west front of the Institute. To the south of the Albert Institute stand the elegant and convenient Club House, the Free Gaelic church, and the National Bank buildings. In the Nethergate, a short distance west from the High street, stand the "Town's Churches," and the "Old Steeple." The church, or rather churches, of which this tower is the remnant, were destroyed by fire in 1841, but were re-built and the dimensions of the block are so capacious as to comprise three distinct parochial churches within its walls. Inside the grounds stands the ancient market cross, removed from High street. It is a carved pillar supporting an unicorn, which holds an armorial shield between its knees. Tradition ascribes the erection of the tower to David, Earl of Huntingdon, but its architectural features indicate a later date as the period of erection. It has undergone a restoration under the superintendence of Sir Gilbert Scott. A peal of bells, the gift of a number of generous citizens, has been placed in the tower which is looked upon as one of the finest specimens of the style of architecture to which it belongs. Adjoining the church of St. Andrew, in the Cowgate, is a meeting-house for the Glasites—a section of the religious world founded by Mr. John Glass, who, it appears, was made a freeman of Dundee by the town council in 1753.

Besides the burial grounds belonging to the corporation, the Western Cemetery, in the Perth road, has a beautiful site, and is gracefully planted with shrubs and flowers. In this cemetery lie the remains of William Thom, known as the Inverury Poet, and the author of the "Mitherless Bairn." Dudhope Castle, originally the seat of the Scrymgeour family, standard bearers to the Scottish kings, stands on the face of the rising ground to the north of the town, and was at one time the property of Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee. In recent times it was used as a military barracks, but the lease of the Board of Ordnance having lately expired it is now deserted, and will probably, ere long, be either removed or modified to suit some other purpose. From the approach to this ancient mansion is a fine view of the gaol, in front of which there is an elegant Court House, in which the assizes are held. This building is in the Tuscan style of architecture, upon the pediment of which the Royal arms are boldly sculptured. Adjoining the entrance to the barracks is the public bleaching green; near this spot a time gun has been placed. The Royal Infirmary, erected in 1853, near to the barracks, furnishes an attractive evidence of the benevolent efforts of the wealthy for the amelioration of human suffering and misery. It is from designs by Messrs. Osse & Goodwin, of London, and has, with its wings, central tower, and embattled parapets, a very noble appearance. The Royal Orphan Institution, founded in 1815, is an admirable charity, the orphans being accommodated in a beautiful and commodious building at Craigie terrace, overlooking the river. The Dundee Industrial Schools Society watch over two excellent institutions for the educational training of neglected children. One, for girls, is accommodated in a suitable building in Ward's road, the other, for boys, is at Baldovan, a healthy suburban village to the north of the town. There is also an excellent asylum at Baldovan, under the patronage of Queen Victoria, for the treatment of imbecile and idiot children. In this place mention may be made of the Mars Training Ship Institution for Homeless and Destitute Boys. The "Mars," an old three-decker, is moored in the Tay at Woodhaven, and several hundred boys are educated on board, chiefly with a view to their either joining merchant vessels or entering the royal navy. An institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, established in 1846, and situated at Dudhope Bank, Lochee road, is another noteworthy educational enterprise of a charitable nature. It is maintained by the directors of the Dundee Association for Aiding the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, from the interest of invested funds, and from the interest of property left by the late James Key, Esq. The Dundee Royal Lunatic Asylum formerly occupied a site on the Forfar road, but the growth of the town rendered a change necessary, and new buildings were erected in 1882, at West Green, about five miles west of Dundee, which have accommodation for upwards of 300 patients. In style the building is very simple, but the gables are crow stepped, and there are a few turrets introduced to give it an old Scotch character. The grounds in connection extend to nearly 100 acres. Messrs. Edward and Robertson, Dundee, were the architects, and the cost was about £46,000. In close proximity to the old Lunatic Asylum stands the Poor House, capable of holding about 300 inmates. It was opened for their reception in November, 1856, and cost about £10,000. Since that time wings for hospital purposes have been built at the sole expense of Mr. Molison, chairman of the Parochial Board, at a cost of upwards of £1,000. In the same neighbourhood stands the Morgan Hospital, occupying a commanding site. The building which is of massive and striking proportions, is seen to advantage from all the higher parts of the town, as well as from the river. This institution was originally erected for the education and maintenance of 100 boys, the sons of tradesmen, mechanics and persons of the working classes generally, whose parents stood in need of assistance, and who were only admitted between the ages of seven and ten years, and left at the age of fifteen years. One or both of the parents of the boys must have been born in Dundee, Forfar, Montrose, or Arbroath, the preference being given to the boys of parents belonging to this town. The institution owes its existence to the benevolence of the late Mr. Morgan, a native of Dundee, who left the bulk of his fortune to carry out the above-mentioned objects. The total sum secured—after a law plea in regard to the validity of the will—for the erection and maintenance of the institution was £78,500. We may, however, state that the Endowed Schools Commission have recently converted this building into a secondary school on similar lines to the Harris Academy already noticed, which has much enhanced its usefulness. The building is in the Flemish-Gothic style, and is quadrangular in form, two storeys in height, with an open court inside, and a centre tower rising to the height of 120 feet, the whole being erected from designs by Peddie and Kinnear, architects, Edinburgh, at a cost of about £15,000. Another noble educational institution, the University College, has also been established in the town. Through the munificence of the late Miss Baxter, of Belgavies, and her relation, the late Dr. Boyd Baxter, a sum of £150,000 was provided for this purpose. An excellent site, known as the Whiteleys, in the Nethergate, was secured. There were four large dwelling houses on the ground, and a church belonging to the congregation of Free St. John's. These were utilised as class rooms and laboratories, the church making an excellent college hall. On a portion of the vacant ground a large chemical laboratory was erected at a cost of about £10,000. This laboratory is one of the finest in the kingdom. In all £50,000 was spent in purchasing and equipping the buildings, and the remaining £100,000 was appropriated as a permanent endowment fund. The deed of endowment and trust directs that the college shall be for promoting the education of persons of both sexes for the study of science, literature, and the fine arts. The institution is entirely unsectarian, and has recently been affiliated to the ancient University of St. Andrews. A medical school has also been established in connection with the college. For this purpose the late Mr. Thomas H. Cox, gave the handsome donation of £12,000, and the son and daughter of the late Mr. J. H. White, £6,000, so that there is every prospect of it proving a success. There are at present ten chairs in the college—Mathematics and Natural Philosophy (Professor Stegall, M.A.); Chemistry (Professor Percy F. Frankland, Ph.D.); Engineering and Drawing (Professor T. Claxton Fidler, M. Inst. C.E.); Zoology (Professor D'Arcy W. Thompson, B.A.); Botany (J. F. White chair—Professor Patrick Geddes); Anatomy (F. H. Cox chair—Professor A. M. Paterson, M.D.); Physiology (Professor E. Waymouth Reid, B.A., M.B.); Classics and Ancient History (Professor W. Peterson, M.A., LL.D.); English Language and Literature and Modern History (Professor Wm. S. McCarmick, M.A.). The primary education of the burgh is under the control of the School Board. Including the Harris Academy, the Board has nineteen schools, the majority of which have been erected since the Education Act came into force. Another institution which is likely to prove a great boon, especially to artisans, is the Technical Institute, which has been recently opened. The sum of £20,000 (since increased to about £26,000) was left by the late Sir David Baxter for the establishment of this school, for the instruction and training of artisans in their various trades and arts, to enable them to perform their duties with the highest efficiency. This structure has been erected on the grounds of University College, where the use of its splendid laboratories will be conveniently available, as well as the services of efficient teachers.

In the centre of Dock street, and spanning the north end of the Mid quay is an ornamental arch, or rather a structure surmounting three arches; a capacious central one, and two of smaller dimensions at the sides. The style is Norman, and each front is richly sculptured with countless intersections of circular arches; two octagonal turrets rise from the summit. This costly monument was raised to commemorate the landing near this spot of Queen Victoria. To the east of King William Dock, in the same street, stands the Custom House, an imposing building with a Grecian portico. Opposite the Custom House a Sailors' Home has been erected. It was formerly opened by the late Earl of Dalhousie on 16th December, 1881. The building cost upwards of £12,000, the money having been provided by several philanthropic citizens. It is designed in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and has an imposing appearance. There is sleeping room for about 100 seamen, and ample provision has been made for securing the comfort of those who avail themselves of the accommodation provided. The offices of the Mercantile Marine Department are in the same building. From the west end of Dock street, Union street forms a communication with the Nethergate; it contains excellent shops, and the Thistle Hall, much used for public meetings. The various banking establishments occupy buildings which likewise contribute to the embellishment of the town, as well as to the facilities of its trade. At the top of Reform street, and corner of Ward road, are the post and telegraph offices, a building in the Italian style of architecture. This, for a considerable period, was found sufficiently commodious, but the recent great expansion in the postal and telegraph business of the city has rendered it too contracted. It has, therefore, been resolved to erect a larger structure upon a site slightly to the westward, which will doubtless prove both spacious and ornate. The Royal Exchange and Chamber of Commerce, Panmure street, was erected in 1852, at a cost of about £10,000. It is a handsome building, in the Flemish-Gothic style of the 14th century. The Young Men's Christian Association Rooms, in Constitution road, are probably as well adapted for their purpose as any in the kingdom. The Curr Night Refuge, in West Bell street, erected by money left for that purpose by the late Mrs. Curr, supplies a long-felt want in affording a comfortable retreat for the night to homeless strangers. A public gymnasium has lately been erected in the Ward road. It is in the French Renaissance style of architecture, designed by Balie McCulloch, of Dundee. Within, it is spacious and well appointed, and suitable for the practice of all kinds of gymnastic exercises, and since its opening it has been much patronized by the youth of the city.

Of late years several elegant churches have been erected in the town. Free St. Paul's and Free St. Enoch's in the Nethergate, and St. Mark's Established Church, Free St. John's, Ryehill, U.P. Church, and the McChyne Memorial Church, in the Perth road, may be particularly mentioned.

In 1863 a splendid public park of upwards of 30 acres was presented to the town by the late Sir David Baxter, Bart., and endowed with funds necessary to maintain it. The park, which is at the east end of the town, was beautifully laid out by the late Sir Joseph Paxton, and, with the endowment, cost Sir David not less than £50,000. To the east of the Baxter Park is the Eastern Necropolis, a beautifully laid out cemetery. In 1869 the Corporation acquired Balcay Hill, a wooded eminence at the west end of the town, to be used partly as a public park and partly as a cemetery for the west end of the burgh. The portion retained as a public park is 86 acres in extent. It is finely wooded, and from the higher parts of the ground magnificent views are obtained. Altogether it is one of the finest parks in the kingdom. The Law Hill, behind the town, has also been laid out so as to render it more convenient as a place of recreation. In addition to the two parks mentioned, the inhabitants have the privilege of the Magdalen Green, close by the river at the west end of the town, and the Barrack Park, as places of recreation. The "Esplanade," formed by an arrangement with the railway companies when the Tay Bridge Works were constructed, is one of the finest walks or drives to be found anywhere. It is at the present time (1892) being extended to the westward, to enable the inhabitants to obtain access to the river on the south of the Caledonian railway, from which they were formerly debarred.

NEWSPAPERS, &c.—Five newspapers issue weekly from the press of Dundee, and maintain an increasing circulation. The Dundee Advertiser is published daily, and a semi-weekly edition on Tuesdays and Fridays, the market days. This, the leading paper, was established originally in 1801. It has an extensive circulation in the county and district as well as in the town. The People's Journal, published on Saturday, is one of the most popular weekly journals in Scotland, with a circulation of over 220,000 copies. Some years ago a subscription by its readers raised upwards of £800 for the National Lifeboat Institution. The People's Friend is also published at the offices of the Advertiser. The Evening Telegraph, a halfpenny evening journal, appeals to a large class of readers, and has an extensive circulation in Dundee and the neighbouring towns and villages. The Dundee Courier is the oldest morning paper in the north-east of Scotland. A bi-weekly edition is published on Tuesday and Friday. The Weekly News, published on Saturday, has a circulation of over 200,000 copies; it contains tales, historical, military, naval, and humorous sketches. Two satirical publications are issued in this town, the Wizard of the North (monthly) and the Piper (weekly).

MUNICIPAL INSTITUTIONS.—The municipal government of Dundee is exercised by a provost, six bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, an hospital master, a kirk master, and a council of, including the magistrate, twenty-eight members. There are six courts held within the town—the Burgh of Bailie Court, the Sheriff's Court, the Commissary Court, the Guild Court, the Police Court, and the Justice of Peace Small Debt Court. The city is divided into districts and wards, for the convenience of the registration of the burgh electors. Dundee sends two representatives to Parliament; Edmund Robertson, Esq., and John Leng, Esq., are the present members. The principal market days are Tuesday and Friday; and there is a cattle and sheep market held every Tuesday. Fairs—Stobbs' fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 11th July, or the first Tuesday following (o.s.); Dundee first fair, for cattle, sheep, and horses, on the 26th August, if that day falls on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday, if not, the first Tuesday after the 26th August (N.S.); and the second Dundee fair on the 19th September, the same rule observed as that regulating the first fair. Peeing markets for servants are held on the 25th May and on the 22nd November, or on the first Friday thereafter. The number of inhabitants in 1881 was 142,453, and by the returns of 1891 155,640, showing an increase in ten years of 13,185. The assessable rental in 1890-91 was £653,062.

MAINS, formerly called Strathdighty, is a parish lying immediately north of that of Dundee (its post town), about 4 miles therefrom, and chiefly in the vale of the river Dighty, which intersects the parish, and divides it into two nearly equal parts in its course to the Tay. From the banks of the stream the ground rises gently to the north and south. The soil is fertile and well cultivated, and the country has a most pleasant aspect. On the Dighty are several mills, and near the north bank of the river is the extensive bleach-field of Claverhouse, at no great distance from which was the seat of General Graham, whose title of "Claverhouse" (applied from this patrimonial estate) once sounded such alarm in Scotland. The Grahams, of Fintry, were one of the oldest families in this part of the country. Freestone quarries supply some occupation in this parish. The small parish of STRATHMARTINE is now united to that of Mains, which contains the parish church, a Free church, and public schools. DOWNFIELD, a village in this parish, has in recent years been greatly extended, and is now regarded as a suburb of Dundee, from which it is distant about two and a half miles. An asylum for the treatment of imbecile and idiot children was founded at Baldovan, in 1853, by Lady Jane Ogilvy. The Dundee and Newtyle railway runs through the parish, and has stations at BALDOVAN (Downfield) and BALDRAGON. Acreage, 6,301. Population in 1881, 3,490, and in 1891, 3,998.

INVERGOWRIE (or Mylnefield) is a village singularly situated, being partly in Perthshire and partly in Forfarshire, one portion being in the parish of Longforan, the other in that of Liff. It is 4 miles W. from Dundee. There are an Established church, a Free church, an Episcopal church, and also a Board school. A fragment of an ancient church, said to be the oldest in Scotland, forms an interesting object. A graveyard surrounds it, in which are deposited the remains of several highly respectable persons; among others the Very Rev. Henage Horsley, M.A., Dean of Brechin and prebendary of Saint Asaph, Son of the renowned Dr. Horsley, Bishop of Saint Asaph. He died in 1847. At BULLIONFIELD, contiguous to the above, in the parish of Liff, is the paper mill of Mr. David M. Watson. The Dundee and Perth railway has a station near the village. The population is chiefly included in the parish of Longforan.

LONGFORAN is a parish (county of Perth), 6 miles S.W. from Dundee, its post town, and a mile from the station of its name on the Dundee and Perth railway. It varies from one to four miles in breadth, and is nine miles in length, forming the eastern boundary of the carse of Gowrie, and extending along the Tay on its southern extremity for more than four miles. It is surrounded on three sides by Inchtuthil, Abernethy, Kettins, Lundie and Fowls, Liff and Benvis. The village is situated on the ridge at an elevation of about 180 feet above the Tay, of which, with the whole of the intermediate country to the east, and particularly to the south and south-west, it commands an uninterrupted prospect. Near here, situated in a dell, are the ruins of a chapel, said to have been erected by Malcolm IV. in 1164, for a community of Cistercian monks. Castle Huntly is the only building of any note in the parish, and forms a noble specimen of an old baronial residence. It was erected about the middle of the fifteenth century, by the second Lord Gray, of Fowls, who named it after his Lady, a daughter of the Earl of Huntly, and who had large possessions in the carse. Its walls are ten feet thick, and the height of the round tower is 116 feet, the view from the top being much and deservedly admired, commanding extensive and beautiful prospects of the Fife coast, with the Ochils and other loftier mountains, &c. The parish church is conveniently situated, as is also a Board school. The soil of the parish varies in quality, but upon the whole is exceedingly productive. There is also an abundant supply of stone of good quality. A fair is held every third Saturday in June (o.s.), chiefly for the sale of cattle. Acreage of the parish, 8,528. Population in 1881, 1,854, and in 1891, 1,779.
